POKER vs. LOVE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

She said she'd like to learn the game,
My innocent love so shy;
Then started to bet with so fierce an air
That she caused me to lay down two good pair,
And she had only ace-high!

Next hand, she'd "straddle the blind," she thought,
Though I'd "raised the ante," too;
And after we'd bet a fearful lot
Said her hand was "pat," and she'd rake the pot,
Which with sorrow I watched her do.

Once she was bluffing, as I supposed,
So I "raised" her with a rush;
Each drew two cards—I am stating facts—
Then my darling quietly showed four jacks,
And I had "a bob-tailed flush."

That night, as we spooned upon the shore,
With the sea and the stars in view,
She said: "That you play the game of love
Far better than that we played above
Is a fortunate thing for you."

And I answered, clasping her fingers tight:
"Your cards were with fortune rife,
But the beautiful hands I am holding now
Are better than any on earth, I vow.
Let me hold them, dear, for life."

PART SECOND.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

Andre could not suffer a female to break her neck without attempting to preserve her from an inevitable fall. He immediately made preparations to stop the animal without dislodgment of the equestrian from her saddle, which was no easy task. He commenced by shouting to prepare the beast for a recontre, and, as it appeared at the turn in the road, gesticulated while advancing obliquely. The horse made a bolt sidewise, which ought to have unseated its rider, but this bolt afforded the Vicomte time to rush up and seize the bridle.

"Hold fast!" ejaculated Andre to the lady, who, dropping the reins, had fastened upon the animal's mane with the frenzy of an idiot.

The horse reared, but the Vicomte, with an iron grasp, promptly tamed its ardor. The lady lost not a second in slipping to the ground, while the beast, relieved of an annoying burden, soon settled down into a calm, and resumed a peaceful tranquillity, showing that it had been hired at some third-rate stable. Then Andre dismounted, to reassure the imprudent female, whom he had extricated from a really dangerous predicament.

"How! It is you," quoth the lady, as soon as she could regain breath.

Andre looked at her features, and was amazed at recognizing Martine Ferrette.

"Ah! monsieur," exclaimed the blonde, "how I regret having caused you trouble. Had you not stopped him, this cursed brute would have dashed out my brains against a tree. Oh! they will never catch me mounting hired nags to please Sartilly or anyone else. I'll hand him over to a public messenger to take home, and will you have the kindness to accompany me to a vehicle? Oh! we won't have far to go."

Andre hesitated. This promenade in the woods with Mademoiselle Ferrette was scarce agreeable, and she guessed at the reason.

"Rest easy," said she; "we won't meet anybody, and you will not regret going with me, as I have something to tell that will be interesting to you. I was almost upon the point of going to your house, but I dare not."

"Come, mademoiselle," replied the Vicomte, taking his horse by the bridle to lead it as they walked.

"That's a good fellow!" exclaimed Martine; "and to reward you I will give you news about our forger—that Ernest who has played us such a rascally trick."

"Ernest?" repeated the Vicomte, who did not remember the name.

"Yes," said Martine. "Don't you recollect that at your house the other day, when the Commandant was explaining to me after your sweetheart had gone, he said that the author of the false letter sending me to make a fool of myself at the Hotel du Herder could be no other than Ernest? He moreover said that, were I to find the dwelling of the rogue, he wanted to know it."

"It strikes me that he did say something like that, but as to the man I am ignorant."

"Did not the Commandant relate what happened to me? No? Then I will tell you, although it is not flattering to my pride. One day, leaving Jeanne De Lorris, I made the acquaintance of a man who hired for me a carriage by the month, and promised to install me in grand state. But I distrusted the fellow, because he had no style, and all his visits were spent in talking. He did nothing but talk about Jeanne, asking me what she did, what she said ——"

"And quitted you suddenly when he perceived he could get no more out of you," interrupted Andre.

"The very same. Well, this villain wrote that forged note to make me come to you, and Mons. D'Arbois wants to lay hands upon him, as he believes him to be an enemy of Jeanne. He is not deceived, for it was he who allured me to make trouble between you and Jeanne's daughter."

And as Andre made a sign of denial the blonde continued:

"Don't deny the fact. Now, I think of rendering a service to you and to Jeanne, as you say she wants to catch the scoundrel playing you all such bad turns."

"You know him?" asked Andre excitedly.

"I know what he is. It pains me to confess it, but the fellow, whom I received so well, was only a valet-de-chambre."

"A valet-de-chambre! With whom?"

"Ah! there it is. I did not ask him, as I did not speak to him."

"How do you know him to be a servant?"

"Oh! that was easily seen. He was not in livery when I met him, but there is a style in wearing black clothes at eleven in the morning, and, moreover, a gentleman in black delivering commissions might be only a lackey. I saw him deliver a letter to a person who took it without return of his bow."

"You should have followed him. You are no further advanced than if you had not seen him."

"Yes, yes; but we both know the person to whom he delivered the letter."

"His name?"

"Your friend the Commandant D'Arbois."

"The details, if you please."

"He was coming out of the Grand Hotel as I was passing in a carriage. He stopped to light a cigar, and there was a block of vehicles on the boulevard, and, during the stoppage, I looked out of the window. I saw Ernest, whom I recognized at a glance, respectfully approach the Commandant, take off his hat and hand him a letter. D'Arbois read it and sent him away with a gesture, as if to say there was no answer. Now, I am certain of the fellow, and I suppose his master pays him to bother us."

"I am sure of it," murmured the Vicomte.

"Well, here we are," said Martine.

The road they had followed led directly to an entrance where there were coachmen and messengers awaiting customers, and Martine had only to make her choice. She entrusted her animal to a public messenger to return it to the livery-stable, and then leisurely ascended into a closed carriage, but not before again thanking the Vicomte warmly.

Andre saw Martine depart, and the revelations made by her so absorbed his thoughts that he did not at once remount his horse.

"That girl does not lie," he meditated, "and why should she? Neither has she been deceived. She has recognized that man. Therese's persecutor is there upon intimate terms with the Commandant; still Gontran has numerous friends—Sartilly, Desternay and others whom I have not seen, to say nothing of Monsieur De Randal, who is to marry Mademoiselle Valdieu. This man has a valet-de-chambre, who received me when I presented myself at his house, and I must interrogate the Commandant without letting him know the cause for my investigation. I will ask him whether the Baron's domestic handed him a letter yesterday in front of the Grand Hotel, and should he answer I shall know what to do. It will then be destined for me to deliver Therese from this scoundrel—yes, for me alone, as now I even distrust Gontran."

Upon this conclusion Andre leaped into the saddle and started off at full speed.

CHAPTER V.—THE DUEL IN THE GARDEN.

Since being informed by Martine that Gontran knew the master of that valet-de-chambre whom he suspected to be in the service of Therese's mysterious enemy, Andre was no longer himself. He had not the same confidence in the Commandant as heretofore, and the manner of their parting precluded the idea of either visiting the other.

The Vicomte considered that, as he must question Gontran, it would be better to meet him, as if by chance, in the vicinity of his hotel. Consequently, for six days Andre hovered around that locality uselessly; but upon the sixth he caught sight of the Commandant emerging from a restaurant, when, advancing to accost him, he perceived Randal to be in his company. The gentlemen had been dining, and undoubtedly gloriously, for they appeared merry. They had noticed the Vicomte, and advanced towards him until it was too late for him to avoid them. Andre held his ground firmly.

"Parbleu! dear fellow, I am delighted to see you!" exclaimed Gontran. "We were just speaking of you."

This manner of opening a conversation singularly annoyed the Vicomte, who answered with a haughty air:

"In what connection has Mons. De Randal done me the honor of making observations touching me?"

"Oh! don't get angry," said the Commandant. "The Baron knows you are a friend of mine, and we spoke no evil of you."

"I am very grateful to you," returned Andre, without departing from his austerity. "Still, you must observe that you have not answered the question I propounded."

"My dear Andre," said Gontran coldly, "you assume a tone which I support from nobody; but I remember having been your father's friend, and that I am still yours—at least, I trust as much."

"I have nothing against you," murmured the Vicomte.

"It is therefore with me that you have business, sir?" inquired Randal with affected courtesy. "May I learn why?"

"I have no explanation to give you."

Then ensued a brief silence. Andre had yielded to an excitement he had not foreseen. Sight of his rival had aroused his passions, while the Commandant's remarks had fired the train. He was no longer master of himself, and he only sought a pretext to break a lance with Therese's future husband, whom he suspected of being a scoundrel. Randal, on the other hand, was very calm and inclined to avoid a quarrel.

"Sir," resumed he courteously, "I regret having unintentionally offended you. I prefer believing you to be in a bad humor this evening, or that my presence hinders you from conversing with Mons. D'Arbois."

"You are not mistaken. Your presence hinders me," replied the Vicomte, looking upon his rival determinedly. "I desire to be alone with Mons. D'Arbois to address him a question which you should not hear, as they relate to your modes of acting."

"Very well. I leave you, Commandant."

"Remain, I beg of you," said Gontran sharply. Then, turning to Andre, he resumed: "What have you to ask of me? You can speak in the Baron's presence, as he is my friend."

He spoke in a rude manner, and Andre for a moment hesitated, yet, at the point he stood, he could do naught but advance.

"I desire to know," he said, "whether, on the evening prior to our meeting in the Bois de Boulogne, Mons. De Randal's valet-de-chambre delivered to you a letter as you were going out of the Grand Hotel."

"You are joking with me?"

"Not in the least, as I shall shortly prove."

"I count upon it, and say frankly that Mons. De Randal upon that evening sent me a note by his valet-de-chambre. What next?"

"What next? Look at Mons. De Randal and ask him why he turns pale. I know him, and I brand him as a scoundrel."

"Andre! you are crazy!" exclaimed Gontran.

"No, dear Commandant, I am not, and he shall show me cause for his despicable proceedings. It was he who caused his servant to write the letter sending to my house Martine Ferrette, and another which ——"

"It is false!" interrupted the Baron.

Andre raised his hand to strike him in the face. Gontran stopped that movement; still the Vicomte was able to throw around his other hand, holding a cigar, into Randal's face. The deed was done, Andre had attained his aim. He now knew that Mons. De Randal employed his valet in his sinister workings, and he was to lay bare the situation of things by the infliction of an insult no man could endure, unless he be a scoundrel disguised as a gentleman. The Baron was extremely pale, but he did not lose his self-command, and he said, without apparent excitement:

"Sir, you may expect my seconds in the morning. They will wait upon you in the forenoon."

"Why not this evening?" demanded the Vicomte coolly. "We will sooner finish."

"As you please. I go ——"

"My dear Randal," interrupted the Commandant, "I will be your second. Be pleased to leave me for an instant. I desire to speak to Mons. D'Elven."

The Baron moved to a short distance, and Gontran, taking the Vicomte's arm, led him beneath an open porch.

"What you have done is unjustifiable," he said curtly. "Jealousy has impelled you to it."

"No," protested Andre; "I have treated this man as he deserves. For proof, it suffices to inform you that his valet-de-chambre called himself Ernest at the house of Martine Ferrette. Conclude for yourself."

"This is absurd!" exclaimed the Commandant. "The girl recognized him as she was passing in a carriage, when he delivered his master's letter."

"And you put faith in such a creature! I am sorry for you, my dear fellow, but I would not waste time in verifying an accusation not based on common sense. Your inexcusable violence has placed all of us in a deplorable position. A duel must necessarily ensue, and you must permit me to regulate it according to my understanding. Madame Valdieu's name must not be mentioned in connection with this business, and if you have any lingering affection for her daughter you will accept my proposed conditions."

"I will do as you desire."

"Then you will not object to my serving as Randal's second, and to my selection of yours. Two seconds will be sufficient, and it is useless that the one I send you should know the cause of the duel. Are you not of my opinion?"

"Decidedly."

"You know that Randal, as the challenged party, has the choice of weapons?"

"I will leave it to him in any case."

"Very well. I think furthermore that he will select swords. At least, I will advise him against pistols. You are a good swordsman if I remember correctly?"

"Good enough for my defense."

"Come, you are a worthy fellow, and I hope that this stupid business will terminate without grave blood-letting."

"I hope, on the contrary, that I shall either kill Randal or that he slays me."

"Then you imagine you could marry Therese were the Baron dead?"

"No; I know that marriage to be impossible; but I will have at least the honor of delivering her from an enemy sworn to her perdition."

"Ah! you believe that enemy to be Randal. At this moment you are beyond reasoning. But to business. While you promenade the boulevard I will consult with Randal and arrange the terms for the combat."

"Be it so," replied Andre with indifference.

"Then I will be with you soon again," and with this observation Gontran went to rejoin Randal, who was standing some twenty paces distant.

Andre watched them as they moved away, and then he walked leisurely towards the place on the Boulevard where the Commandant was to rejoin him.

The Vicomte walked for about half an hour, when he perceived the Commandant coming towards him, flanked by a military gentleman—a tall and solid individual, with a tight-fitting frock-coat, his hat cocked over his ear, and a bronzed countenance as dark as an Arab's. After formal introductions the Commandant commenced speaking, and maintained the conversation as Captain Marillac, naturally taciturn, approved in monosyllables everything said by his old comrade, at present his superior officer.

"All is arranged subject to your approval," quoth Gontran. "The Baron selects the sword, as is his incontestable right. You will fight to-morrow at six, and Marillac will be your second."

"I raise no objections," replied Andre, "and thank the gentleman for the honor done me."

"The honor is mine, sir," said the Captain.

"Now," resumed Gontran, "do you prefer to fight in one of the woods adjoining the suburbs?"

"No; the place is of no consequence to me, provided I fight."

"Then you will have no objection to the affair coming off in a garden?"

"Not the least in the world."

"Well! we have determined unanimously that the duel will take place in the Baron's garden."

"There!" ejaculated Andre in surprise.

"It is understood," added the Commandant, "that you are at liberty to refuse this arrangement. Now let me explain our reasons. A fight elsewhere subjects us to interruption by the gendarmerie, and in two days it will be the talk of all Paris. Randal's garden is a walled-in inclosure, where you can battle without being surprised or seen ——"

"I know the place," interrupted Andre.

"Oh, I recollect," observed the Commandant, "you went to Randal's in search of me. Well, I assume the responsibility for infraction of ordinary dueling customs. Moreover, no one will be killed. You will draw blood from the Baron or he from you. Honor will be satisfied, and nobody will know that you have crossed blades, not even our friends on the Boulevard d'Italie."

"My dear Commandant," interrupted the Vicomte, "your reasoning is excellent; still, it would fail to convince me were you not Randal's second. Since you will be present to secure fair play, I accept."

"Then," said the Commandant, "my old comrade will call for you and take you to Randal's. You will find me there, ready for your reception."

"I am satisfied," simply answered the Vicomte.

"You have not with you in Paris your weapons?"

"No; I can use those of the Baron."

"That would be irregular, and there are too many irregularities in the business already. I will borrow Desternay's weapons, unused by either of you, and it is necessary that you stand on an equality. Have you any more suggestions to make?"

"Oh! none," responded Andre; "I have only to thank you for hastening the business to a speedy termination."

"Your adversary, my dear Andre, thinks the same, and I detect prolonged quarrels. You have not, then, to thank me. Still, I hope that we remain good friends after this meeting; for you must understand that a duel was inevitable, and I could not refuse to assist my friend Randal upon an occasion where the wrong rested not with him."

Upon this conclusion of an amicable reprimand the Commandant extended his hand to Andre, who pressed it with slight cordiality. Captain Marillac, habitually silent, merely bowed to the Vicomte and retired with his superior. Andre remained, and his meditations were by no means joyous. It was not that he feared to fight, but the attitude assumed by Gontran afflicted him as much as it astonished him.

"Here is a honorable gentleman," he thought to himself as he walked, "my father's friend, who has always evidenced an affection for me, a brave and loyal soldier, incapable of tarnishing his honor, taking side with that scoundrel! He espouses his quarrel, without inquiry as to the accusation I bring against him, or whether he does not deserve the injury I have inflicted upon his face. He fears not to compromise himself through serving as a second, although to-morrow all Paris may learn this pretended Baron to be an impostor and scoundrel of the worst type. What could this Randal have done to capture his confidence to such a degree?"

Andre, mechanically following the boulevard, was still in meditation when he reached the Rue du Helder.

At the moment of turning into that dark street he fancied he saw a person cross from the opposite side, as if with an intention of accosting him. At a like hour, and within a stone's throw of the boulevard, an assault could not be anticipated, and Andre, conceiving the lounger to be a mendicant soliciting alms, sought in his pocket for a small coin, but the man did not approach close to him, although continuing to walk on the same sidewalk. Arrived at his hotel, the Vicomte turned and perceived the mysterious person to be increasing his pace. There could be no doubt that this individual desired to speak to him; nevertheless, he was not obliged to await his movements. Consequently, he placed his hand upon the bell-pull and was ringing when the person diminished with three strides the space between them. Andre, in surprise, changed his manner, and prepared to receive him energetically; but the man, stopping at a respectful distance, addressed him in a most humble tone:

"I perceive the gentleman does not recognize me."

"What do you want with me? I have never seen you," replied the Vicomte, glancing at the speaker.

He was a poor devil, clad in a seedy frockcoat and with a crushed felt-hat crowning his head, bound up in a complicated bandage. He leaned upon a stick, and had the appearance of a convalescent just emerged from a hospital.

"The gentleman has seen me upon this very spot, but you paid no attention to me. To-day I am not dressed the same as upon that one—I was in a blouse then."

"A blouse?" repeated the Vicomte, suddenly struck with a remembrance.

"Yes; I opened the door of the gentlemen's hack; it was Sunday, and a half-hour afterwards he received a visit from a lady."

"Ah! now I remember. It was you who went to notify the people paying you as a spy on me. You are a reprobate! Go your way, if you do not wish to be arrested."

"The gentleman will gain nothing by my arrest, while, should he listen to me, I will inform him of things to his advantage."

"I have nothing to learn from a rascal like you."

"I can tell you the name of the man who has played you villainous tricks."

Andre trembled. He began to comprehend.

"To what man do you allude?" he inquired abruptly.

"To one playing a big figure in Paris, who should be in the galleys."

"Well, name him."

"Not here, sir. The gentleman may not believe me. It is necessary to explain, in the first place, all that this rascal has done during fifteen days, not only against the gentleman, but also against his female friends."

"You do not, I suppose, aspire to enter my house?"

"No; but at the end of the street is the Boulevard Haussmann, where few people travel ——"

This proposition was unexpected, and Andre hesitated to accept it. Still, as he confessed the impossibility of an attack in the heart of Paris in close proximity to an omnibus-station, he consented.

"Be it so!" he said. "Come, and I will consent to listen to you for ten minutes."

"I ask no more," murmured the man, "and you will never regret having listened to me."

Upon this assurance he walked in advance, and Andre followed close behind him. The designated locality was well selected to hold a conversation afar from inquisitive intrusion.

"If the gentleman will allow me to seat myself," said the man timidly, "I shall be satisfied. In the first place, we will be the less remarked, and then I have little strength, and can scarcely stand on my legs."

"Seat yourself, and be brief," said the Vicomte, pointing to a bench.

And, resolved to fathom the entire business, he assumed a place at the side of the man, who hastened to avail himself of the permission to rest.

"You have been waiting for me a long while, that you are so tired," resumed Andre, examining by a gaslight the man's features.

"For over two hours," responded the individual without hesitation. "I knew you not to be at home, and I supposed you would return by the boulevard. I would have remained all night, if need be."

"Why were you so anxious to see me?"

"Because you will aid in my revenge."

"Upon whom?"

"Upon the miscreant whom I served and who attempted to murder me. It is not his fault that I am here."

"Well, denounce him."

"I would not be believed, and, were I to be believed, I would be imprisoned with him for I have worked in his villainous doings. And, moreover, before meeting with him I had a bad record, and he knew it. You see I don't want to whitewash myself."

"Come to facts."

"Do you not place me?"

"It seems that your face is not unknown to me; still, as upon the day you watched at my hotel-door, I did not remark you. I must have met you elsewhere."

"Yes, in a place where you gave me such a blow with your fist as to make me see a shower of stars."

"At the Garden of Plants, near the Labyrinth. Why insult that young lady?"

"Because I was commanded to bring her to the Rue Lacepede, where a carriage was in waiting. I didn't know then who she was, and I acted badly in attempting to kiss her."

"He who commanded you—name him!" exclaimed the Vicomte. "The villain was Mons. De Randal."

"I concluded that you would finish by imagining who it was," said the man, not in the least disconcerted.

"Now, then, continue," resumed Andre, the more excited of the two. "Why would he have enticed Mademoiselle Valdieu to that carriage?"

"To abduct her, if not to twist her neck. He is capable of that, as he has served others in the same way. But I must tell you how I came to know him. About a month ago I was on the streets and dying of hunger, when I met with a beggar who was with me at Poissy—I have been five years in prison, and don't hide it, and he has served ten, but he finished his time as I came in. I remembered him all the same, and I addressed him boldly on the quay, where he was smoking his cigar. He was got up like a prince, and he began by making believe that he did not know what I was talking about; but when he saw I would not let him drop he took me to a wine-shop, and there, in a private room, we chatted like a pair of friends while emptying a bottle of prime wine. He asked me what I was doing, and whether I wanted to work in the same style as tion to refuse, and we came to an understanding at once. When he told me he was in the service of a Baron ——"

"As valet-de-chambre, was it not?"

"Stay, you know that! You may likewise know that that rascal kept for eight days the cocotte who fell upon you when the young lady was at your house. She planted herself by order of the Boss, who sent her to your place by means of a letter signed by one of your friends. It was Pervenche—that he calls himself—who wrote that letter, which I delivered to the cocotte after seeing you return to the hotel."

"He wrote others, undoubtedly?"

"Three or four on the same day, dictated by the Boss. He writes a superb hand, and imitates any kind of writing, although he got his ten years for forgery."

"Then the one delivered by the boy to Mademoiselle Valdieu ——"

"Was done by him, and the boy is a worthless waif from the House of Correction, who will bring up under the guillotine—Pervenche's protege, and that tells the story. But you don't know the final stroke. They made use of your name to allure the young lady out of her house on the Boulevard d'Italie on the same Sunday after the hotel-business. The toad, dressed as a hotel-chasseur, found a way to pass a note through the gate to the little one, saying that it came from you."

"And she believed it? Impossible."

"She did so much so that she went out all alone at ten o'clock in the night. Pomme D'Amour—that's the boy's nickname—watched at the gate, while Pervenche and I waited for her in the Rue Corvisart to hand her over to the Boss."

"Scoundrel!" ejaculated Andre. "Dare you boast of such a deed?"

"I do not boast," said the man; "but I have promised you to tell all, and I have not finished. Pervenche had told me that the girl would come of her free will, because she was in love with the Boss, and I, like a fool, believed in such bosh. Now you see what a simpleton I was. We reached the Rue Corvisart, and plastered ourselves against a wall. They told me that there would be a hack, into which the girl would mount without being asked. I looked around and could see no coach. I asked why, and Pervenche told me to hold my tongue. By-and-bye the girl arrived, conducted by Pomme, who cut and ran. Pervenche went for her, calling upon me to aid him. The child fought and called for help, when I heard a carriage rattle up the boulevard and stop. A gentleman got out and fell upon us with a cane. I received a blow stunning me, and I fell on the ground; still I had time to recognize ——"

"Randal?"

"You have guessed it again. Yes, this villain Randal, who wished to win glory through deliverance of the little one to get rid of me, who was in his way. Ah! the affair was well planned; but it only half succeeded, as I still live. I had not lost consciousness, and I comprehended his trick. I knew that he dare not finish me in the girl's presence, but when he had taken her away he would return to beat my brains out. I made believe to be dead until he was gone. Pervenche had flown at the beginning; but I knew he would come back, as he was in concert with the Boss. I had no notion further to reappear and settle my account. I picked myself up as best I could, and dragged myself to the barrier. I have a comrade at Gentilly, a rag-picker, who lodged me in his garret. I almost caved in upon the rags on which I slept. I had my skull hurt, but dragged through, and from the time of being able to walk I have come, waiting for you to hear my story."

"Why me? You do not calculate, I presume, that I am going to associate myself with a man of your description?"

"No, no. I know very well that we cannot work together; but I also know that you care for the little one, and will be very glad to rid her of the scoundrel, not worth the cord to hang him, who will do her harm if you do not denounce him. I can do nothing against him; but you, sir, can do everything. You have only to say to your friends that this bogus Baron has for his confidential valet a liberated convict. That will work, and when the police get a finger in the pie funny things will come out."

Pelican grew so animated that he seemed to forget all about his aches and pains.

"Only inform the officer," he resumed, "whose writing Pervenche imitated, and you will see! I did not address him, for Randal has him in his pocket, and since I played him a trick he would not receive me. One night he surprised me before the gate of those boulevard ladies, and fastened onto me to find out whence I came. He suspected that I was paid to annoy Madame Valdieu, his sweetheart; but I was more cunning than he. I took him behind the Boss' house, telling him that I was going to scale the wall to rob the box, and, as I had with me a knotted cord I was going to use to enter the little one's house, he let me do it, thinking to nab me. But the Boss was wide-awake, and hid me in the cellar; so when the Commandant came to tell him that there was a robber in the house he made believe to search everywhere, and that is how they came to know each other."

"Will you repeat this story to the Commandant?" asked the Vicomte.

"I will, should you be present to sustain me. Otherwise, it were not worth the trouble. He will not listen to me, and may cause my arrest."

Then ensued a silence.

"Ah! you are wrong in being bothered by that man," resumed Pelican. "He has many other villanies upon his conscience, and is no more a Baron than I am. I don't know all his crimes; but Pervenche, his familiar, does. I would give my head for a football if he did not murder a woman—the one you know dying in the Rue de Ponthieu, and who was carried to the Morgue."

"Why do you believe so?"

"Because Pervenche sent me to the Morgue while she was there. He made me put on a false beard, and the evening before he showed me the young lady's mother, knowing probably that she would come to see the body, for I received orders to watch at the door of the deadhouse, to enter after her, and, if she made any show of going to the office to identify the corpse, I was to whisper in her ear: 'Look out for your daughter.' I did so, and received compliments and a reward; and I said to myself that, had not the Boss murdered the woman exposed in the Morgue, he would not have taken so much trouble to prevent her identification."

This was ample. Andre desired to hear no more. His determination was reached. Gontran alone would be able to see clear in the mysterious shades enveloping Madame De Lorris. The Vicomte decided upon doing nothing without him, and he knew where to find him on the morrow.

"Listen to me closely," he said coldly to the informer. "I am ready to place you in the officer's presence and to stand by you. If you have not lied, Randal will meet his just deserts, and you will be supplied with money to go abroad."

"Then it is an accomplished fact!" exclaimed Pelican. "You have only to give me orders. I will await you wherever you please. I have still a little money, and I know of a lodging-house near by where they will not ask for my papers. To-night I will sleep there, and, if you have need of me to-morrow ——"

"To-morrow find me at a little before six at the entrance to the Pont Henry IV, on the quay in front of Randal's house."

"The devil! If it makes no difference, I would prefer another rendezvous, as Pervenche or the Baron might see me."

"None will see you except the officer who will be waiting, and who will arrive at Randal's before me. I will call him out and explain the matter you are to talk about. I will take care of the rest."

"I see. You are going to fight the Baron to-morrow morning, and the officer is his second."

"What matters that to you?"

"So much that you ought not to risk your life against that of a scoundrel without reckoning the man is capable of anything, even of killing you treacherously, particularly if you fight in his garden."

"Spare your reflections and advice," said Andre, astonished at Pelican's perspicuity. "Will you be there? That is all I wish to know."

"You can count upon me. Only, instead of the quay, I prefer waiting in a little street behind the garden-wall, where no one can overhear our conversation."

"Be it so. I will seek you there, and if I don't find you I shall know that you have lied. Now go!"

Pelican obeyed without another word. Andre watched him making his way towards the Rue de la Chausse d'Autin, and then returned to his own home.

After apprising the porter that a gentleman would call for him at an early hour, the Vicomte went to bed. He slept fitfully and badly. He was up before dawn and was ready to go out, when Captain Marillac knocked at the door. The African veteran was buttoned up to the chin, and was more silent than ever, scarcely exchanging a few polite words with Andre, who was likewise not much inclined to converse. A hack was below, with the swords, enveloped in a green covering, upon the cushions. The Captain did Andre the honor of requesting him to ascend into the vehicle the first, and then assumed a seat, after giving the driver the Baron's address, with an injunction to make good time.

Approaching Randal's house, it became necessary for Andre to inform his second that he proposed to have an interview with Gontran before entering the dwelling.

"I will stop the hack, sir," he said, "at the corner of the quay to get out, and I will be obliged to you for requesting the Commandant to find me in a little street behind Randal's garden."

"And for what purpose, may I inquire?" asked the officer.

"I wish to speak to him."

"At the moment of taking the field! It cannot be done! The Commandant is your adversary's second, and if you have any recommendations to make to anyone I must hear them."

"Permit me to say, Captain, that I am the best judge of the appropriateness of my own acts."

"Excuse me! There are rules established by the Code of Honor, and it is my duty to have them observed."

"Yes, upon the field. We are not yet there, and until we are I am at liberty to act as I please. Hence I have the honor of repeating my request to see Mons. D'Arbois alone. He is my friend, and if he acts for Randal he has particular reasons that we avoid this affair becoming noised abroad. It is therefore natural that I desire to see him in person, and I beg you to transmit my request."

"I positively refuse. If you have anything to say to him, say it yourself. I may consent to listen to you in the house but I will warrant you that he will not go out to talk at a street-corner. That would be contrary to all rule. The Commandant knows his business as well as I do, for he has fought twenty times, and will not behave as a conscript. Try him, and you will see."

"Finally," said Andre rudely, "you mean to say that you can make me enter Randal's house against my will?"

"I cannot even make you fight, if you don't want to," returned the Captain, still more rudely.

"I will fight with you when you please," exclaimed the Vicomte, stung by this impolite answer; "but I declare that I will not fight this morning before having seen the Commandant!"

"Do as you please, young man. Here we are, if I am not mistaken, and you can summon the Commandant through the servant opening the door. Still I declare that, should you go away after asking for him, I consider myself not bound to await your return. I will not serve as a second for a man deserting before crossing swords."

The hack stopped at the Baron's door before the Vicomte had time to soften the acrimony of this stormy conversation. Poor Andre was beside himself. And, in truth, to revolt against the scruples of an old swordsman was a contretemps he had not foreseen in arranging his programme for the combat.

The enraged Captain leaped from the vehicle and rang the bell. It was Randal in person answering the peal.

"He has dismissed his valet, and for cause," immediately thought Andre. "The informer has not lied."

"I have the honor of saluting you, sir," quoth Marillac. "I greatly fear I shall derange you for nothing, as the Vicomte D'Elven, whom I bring with me, does not appear to me disposed to expose himself; he desires to parley with the Commandant first, and I am not inclined to loan myself to that whim, much as you may find it to be reasonable."

"What is that? Here I am," interposed Gontran, appearing at the Baron's back.

Andre, who had got out of the hack, looked down the quay, and noticed Pelican's head protruding from behind the street-corner.

"The truth is, dear Commandant, I desired to speak with you first," said the Vicomte, mastering his anger.

"Well, then, come in," said Gontran.

"To speak to you on the outside."

"Impossible, my dear fellow, and you ought to know as much."

"I know," said Randal, "that the Vicomte desires to avoid the reparation due me, and that he is a craven."

"A craven!" bellowed Andre, throwing himself upon the wretch insulting him.

Gontran jumped between them, while Marillac said in a banter:

"Enough vagaries of that kind, young man. Fisticuffs are not in order when you can refresh yourself with swords, and here are swords at your service if your heart's in the game."

"Be it so! let us finish," said Andre, driven to extremities. "Let me pass, Commandant."

Gontran suffered him to enter the house, while the Baron alertly jumped aside to allow his ingress. As Andre went indoors the Captain took the weapons from the hack, after telling the coachman to proceed along the quay, and to stop at a short distance from the house.

THE REFORMED BROKER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Of the days when I was a broker wild,
Gambling hot and heavy in Wall-street stocks,
I am thinking now; and my heart, defiled,
Beats against my ribs with resounding knocks.
Oh, what days were those in the past, so bright,
When the gold rolled into my hands by day,
When I rolled it out in a stream by night
With the boys, for fun and for frolic gay!

Rush & Makorbrake was the firm I run—
Yes, my name is Rush, sir, as you surmise—
And we stood bang-up—well, if number one
Is a standard high, that was just our size!
But, alas! gone by are those golden days,
When, as "bull" or "bear," I my friends would shelve—
But I saw the error, sir, of my ways,
And with these three cards—business-cards—I delve!

R. & M. were rattlers, pray understand,
And we made a noise in that wild Wall street;
And for all 'twas worth did we play our hand,
As they play down there, all the world to beat!
In the "spreads" and "straddles" we daily worked,
In the "puts" were there, and the festive "calls;"
In the "corners" dark and the "pools" we lurked
For our prey, the "lambs," with our sure pitfalls!

We were roaring "bulls," tossing stocks on high,
Or with growling "bears" would co-operate;
We would kite with others or singly fly,
But our great delight was a "syndicate!"
On the "margin" racket we played it sharp,
And the "lambs" we fleeced would most sadly bleat—
But I saw a light, and now tune my harp,
With its triple strings, to a measure sweet!

Oh, the victims many that we "sold out,"
"On the street," the like of which Hades might
Or might not possess; where the "Welshers" sprout,
As the toadstools poisonous sprout at night,
By the scores and hundreds, athirst for pelf,
And for which they strive with a hardened gall;
Where each craving mortal is for himself,
Devil take all those in the rear that fall!

Oh, the homes we ruined I ne'er can tell,
But 'twas all en regle, you know—who carps?
For the boys must buy and the boys must sell,
And there must be "flats," or what need of "sharps?"
We would pluck a friend as you would a goose
For the table, sir—'tis the Wall-street plan—
But I saw the evil at length, and loose
From "the street" I cut and the callous clan!

How came I to see, sir, the evil way?
In a "corner" there we had worked in grain,
Yes, the bottom wholly fell out one day,
And I went flat-broke, and my pard insane!
Am I glad I skipped from my Wall-street pards?
Being broke, my friend, I could do no less;
But this three-card monte—with business-cards—
Is a racket, sir, that I daily bless!

Eh, don't see just where my reform comes in?
Why, my friend, I play for a lesser stake,
And the game, perforce, is a lesser "skin"—
They your thousands scoop, I a "fiver" take.
It's a cut-throat racket the brokers play,
Played without remorse till the victims fail—
Isn't this in keeping? Well, yes, I'll say,
But a cut-throat game on a smaller scale!

CAPT. ROYAL HALLIARD.

OUT OF THE DARK.

Max Raynor was going to Cambridge on a little matter of business, and somehow had mistaken the time, and found on reaching the railway-station that he had a full half-hour to wait. While he was was pacing backward and forward on the platform his eye caught sight of a girl's trim, neat figure, standing a little on one side, and glancing around with a troubled, half-frightened expression upon her lovely face. She seemed so solitary and disconsolate that Max resolved to accost her; so, crossing to her side, he lifted his hat courteously, and said:

"You seem to be quite alone, miss. Are you waiting for anybody?"

"No, no," she answered in a hasty but very sweet tone of voice. "I am not waiting for anybody."

"Can I do anything to help you?"

At this question she looked up at him searchingly. Those were honest eyes that met her own. And the handsome face had something noble and true and sincere in its expression. It was a face to be trusted, and she knew it.

"Oh, sir," she said, drawing a deep, half-sobbing breath; "I am sure you can help me. London is all strange to me, and I feel so confused and at a loss. If you would only tell me what to do I should be very grateful indeed."

"You came in by the express?"

"Yes sir."

"And you wish to find some respectable hotel where you can remain to-night?"

"No, no," she said hastily. "I would much rather not remain here at all. I want to go to Bristol, and I don't know where to find the station, or anything about it."

She looked ready to cry. Raynor could scarcely forbear smiling at her distress. But his heart was full of pity and sympathy none the less.

"Poor child," he said, "you should have taken a cab to Praed street."

"Oh!"

He knew by that exclamation and the expression on her face how wholly unused she was to traveling. And he could guess how forlorn a sensitive woman must feel under such circumstances. After a moment's reflection his resolution was taken. Rosedale, where he had an invitation to visit, was not far from Bristol. He would give up the trip to Cambridge, and so accompany this child on her journey, and see that she was properly cared for. He looked at her with a smile.

"I am also going to Bristol, miss, and if you would like to have me for a traveling companion, and I can be of any possible service to you ——"

"Oh, I am so glad!" she broke out, her whole face lighting up.

There was something so charmingly naive and artless in her exclamation and the joy she took no pains to conceal that Max Raynor smiled again. He found a cab and helped her into it, and in a very few minutes they were at the Great Western terminus.

He did not speak to her again until it was time for them to take their places in the train. After he had purchased the tickets and taken his seat she turned to him and said:

"I am sure you must think I am acting very strangely. But," she hesitated and blushed painfully, "I have been away from home—and—and nobody knows I'm coming back so soon. That is why I am all alone."

She said very little after that. While they stopped at one of the stations on the route Raynor brought some refreshment to his companion, and occupied himself in glancing over the evening-paper.

Of a sudden his eyes fell upon the following advertisement:

WANTED—Information of a young lady who left her home in Clifton on the fifth of July. She is of the middle height, brown eyes, oval face; has a small mole under her left ear. Any person giving information of her whereabouts shall be handsomely rewarded. Address M. B., Post-office, Clifton.

Raynor dropped the paper, and a low exclamation fell from his lips. It was near Clifton that Rosedale was located, and "M. B." were the initials of Mrs. Ballantyne's name. What did it all mean? The young lady turned when he cried out, and regarded him in some surprise. The light fell full upon her face as she did so. "Middle height, brown eyes, oval face"—there they were, all repeated in the person before him. He caught his breath sharply. She continued to look at him.

"What is the matter?" she asked in a half-frightened tone of voice.

"Nothing," he replied.

He picked up the paper and fell back into his seat again. After a brief hesitation his resolution was taken. He tore out the advertisement and held it before her eyes.

"Read that," he said briefly.

She read it, growing deathly white the while, and looking ready to faint.

"I know what you think," she said after a brief silence. "You think I am the person there described. And you are right."

He regarded her with deeper interest than ever.

"And now you are going back to your friends?" he said at last.

"Yes," she replied, stifling a sob. "I tried to live away from them, but found myself likely to starve. Yes, I'm going back. Nobody can claim the reward that is offered, after all," and she smiled half-scornfully.

"Poor child!"

"Do you pity me?" she asked quickly.

"Yes, for I know it must have been some very good reason that compelled your flight."

"It was."

"Will you confide that reason to me?"

"My stepmother would have compelled me to marry a man I disliked. I thought I couldn't do it, so I ran away more than three weeks ago. I hid myself in a little village, and tried to find employment. But I didn't succeed, and here I am going back again."

She spoke very quietly, but there was an undercurrent of bitterness and desperation towards the last.

"You will marry the man you dislike, after all?" said Raynor.

"I suppose I must."

He looked at her keenly.

"I am going to Clifton, too," he said.

"You?"

"Yes," he continued, his eyes never once stirring from her face. "I have friends near there—the Ballantynes. Ralph is a friend of mine. I'm on my way to visit him."

She gave a little gasp, and seemed to be violently agitated.

"Then you are Mr. Raynor," she said, speaking with difficulty.

"Yes; Max Raynor. But how did you know me?"

"I have heard Ralph speak of you over and over again. I knew you were expected about this time."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. I am Beatrice Ballantyne."

Raynor laughed.

"I had guessed as much already, my poor child," he said in a tenderly pleasant tone of voice. "Ralph wrote to me of the 'great sorrow' that had fallen upon him."

"Poor Ralph," she murmured. "It was so very hard to hide myself away from him. I knew he would be terribly grieved over it."

"Why did you do it?"

She drew a deep breath.

"Ah," she said artlessly, "the dear fellow never could have kept my secret. He wouldn't have suffered me to go away. But he was as powerless as myself to hinder anything from taking place that my stepmother had set her heart upon. Dear, dear Ralph! But for him, and the misery I knew he must be in, I would never have come back."

"You would have starved, eh?" laughed Raynor.

"I would have starved."

A short silence fell between them. The young man saw by the lines that were in that lovely face, and its haggard, worn look, that she had suffered much pain and anxiety. Her resolution to return to Rosedale had cost her dear, evidently. He longed almost irresistibly to take her in his arms and comfort her.

"I know your stepmother well," he said presently, "and Miss Isabel Lamont, too. How does it happen that I never met you?"

"I have never been out much," she replied evasively.

"Mrs. Ballantyne does not take you to the fashionable watering-places?"

"Never."

Her lip curled in a bitter smile. Raynor read in her expression what she was too proud to say—that Mrs. Ballantyne was too selfish and envious to put herself to such trouble and expense for a stepdaughter who would only be in her way and Isabel's.

They had much to say to each other during the remainder of the journey. Ralph was such a connecting link between them that they already felt like old friends.

In due course the carriage, which Raynor had engaged at the station to convey them to their destination, rolled up a long avenue bordered with trees, and finally drew up before a red brick house. This was Rosedale. Beatrice was very pale, and seemed all in a flutter when the carriage stopped.

"I am such a coward, she faltered. "Please go in without me. I shall be more composed directly."

Raynor had the tact and good sense to leave her without speaking. He ascended the steps, and was shown into the parlor by a servant. It had but one occupant at the moment—a young man, very handsome, though rather effeminate-looking, with a weak, irresolute mouth and a listless air. This was Ralph Ballantyne. At the sight of Raynor he ran up and warmly grasped both his hands.

"Heaven bless you, old boy!" he cried. "I'm delighted to see you."

"The pleasure is mutual," said Raynor heartily.

Then the two drew back and looked curiously at each other.

"You have not changed at all since I saw you last, dear Max," said Ralph.

"You have. You look sad and very much down in the mouth."

"No wonder," sighed Ralph. "It's all because of Beatrice. Madam, my stepmother, has driven her off by her cruelty. I'm afraid the poor girl has done something desperate."

"Oh, no."

"I believe it; and I am compelled to sit here helpless—doing nothing! Ah, if I only had the dear girl back again she should never again be so persecuted."

"How persecuted?"

"Madam wanted to marry her to old Rascaille, and she hates him. But, hush! I will tell you more anon."

Ralph's quick ear caught the rustle of silken drapery in the passage. He held up his finger warningly. The next instant the door opened and two ladies and a gentleman entered the apartment. The man was a large, burly fellow, at least fifty years of age, with twinkling, bead-like eyes, and a most unprepossessing physiognomy generally. The elder lady was portly and handsome. The younger one was a tall, slight girl, with a colorless face, blue-black hair, and almond-shaped eyes of soft and dusky gloom. These were Mrs. Ballantyne and her daughter by a former marriage—Isabel Lamont.

Of course they recognized Raynor at once, and were all smiles and sweetness.

"It is delightful to renew old associations and to meet with old friends," murmured Mrs. Ballantyne, folding her little white hands. "We were quite intimate at Scarborough last Summer, I believe."

"Quite intimate, madam."

"I have never forgotten you. No more has Isabel. Your name is often mentioned between us. But I had forgotten—pray, pardon me—Mr. Raynor, Mr. Rascaille."

Raynor now turned and looked hard at the man for the first time. He wore bushy whiskers, and his hair was rather long. But, in spite of this attempt at disguise, the young man recognized him as one he had known long before, and under a different name—and of whom he had never known any good.

The recognition was mutual. Mr. Rascaille's eyes dropped, and he bit his thin lips in angry embarrassment.

"Wish I could say I was happy to meet you, Mr. Rascal," muttered Raynor with curling lip.

Mrs. Ballantyne looked round quickly and sharply.

"You have mistaken the name," she said. "It is Rascaille," accenting the last syllable very strongly.

"A most unfortunate patronymic," interpolated he who laid claim to it.

"And very suggestive." Raynor swung on his heel as he spoke. "Madam," he added abruptly, "I have brought a friend with me to Rosedale. May I take the liberty to present that friend without further ceremony?"

It was Isabel who answered:

"A friend of Mr. Raynor's can be no less than welcome. Is it not so, mamma?"

"Certainly, my dear. Where is he? Pray bring him in at once."

Raynor smiled at the pronoun used, but did not see fit to correct her. He went straight out to the carriage, where poor, trembling Beatrice was waiting.

"Courage, my child," he whispered. "I am going to take you in. It will all be over in a few minutes. Don't tremble."

He dropped the veil over her face, led her up the steps and into the parlor, then raised it again.

"Miss Beatrice Ballantyne," he said in a low, distinct voice.

* * * * * * * * *

Later in the day he found opportunity for a long, confidential chat with Ralph.

"My dear fellow," he said abruptly, "I want you to tell me all about this Mr. Rascaille."

"There isn't much to tell. He made his appearance at Rosedale some six months ago, and has remained here ever since."

"Who introduced him to the family?"

"Nobody."

"What?"

"Nobody," repeated Ralph. "He must have known my stepmother years ago, I think. At any rate, he quartered himself upon us like an old friend, and no opposition was made."

Raynor started and looked puzzled.

"That is strange," he said.

"I think so. But madam is a real despot in her own house, and it was of no use remonstrating with her."

"It's a pity your father isn't living!"

"Eh?" Ralph looked up quickly and sharply. "I don't understand you," he faltered.

"No matter. Let me go on with my questioning. Did this Rascaille pay his addresses to Beatrice from the very first?"

"No. I think all that sort of thing was arranged between him and madam after he had been here some weeks."

"Why should Mrs. Ballantyne wish to marry Beatrice to that sort of man?"

Ralph slowly shook his head.

"I'm as sorely puzzled over the matter as you can be. Rascaille is old and ugly, and I don't imagine he can be very rich."

"Yes, yes. The true reason is at the bottom of everything that comes to the surface."

Ralph gave a slight start.

"You have put my own thought into words," he said.

"Then you are not favorably disposed towards the alliance?"

"I?" His cheek crimsoned hotly. "I would rather see Beatrice a corpse than bound to such a man!"

"Then she must never be bound to him."

The poor fellow shrugged his shoulders.

"Madam has a habit of accomplishing whatever she undertakes," he said dryly. "I'm afraid she will not brook failure in this instance."

"She must," cried Raynor. "I know something of this man that makes him a wholly unsuitable match for your sister."

"What is it?"

"I will tell madam—not you."

"Very good," laughed Ralph. "You can't do better. You may have some influence with her, whereas I can lay claim to none."

Raynor was as good as his word. And Mrs. Ballantyne herself opened the way for him to speak. It was that same evening. They were all seated in the parlor, with the exception of Beatrice, who did not make her appearance. Isabel was at the piano playing some brilliant waltzes, and madam drew near her guest, and under cover of the music said to him:

"You must have thought Beatrice's conduct was very strange, Mr. Raynor. But you don't know that incomprehensible girl as well as I do. She took an odd notion into her head that we were all leagued together here at Rosedale in order to persecute her, and so ran away. Very foolish of her, was it not?"

"Very, madam," he returned briefly.

"And it was a wholly mistaken idea."

He turned at that and looked at her.

"I'm not sure," he said politely. "I think it was this Mr. Rascaille whom she feared. If I mistake not, you undertook a little match-making for the two."

Madam's face darkened.

"Did Beatrice tell you that?" she asked sharply.

"I heard of it," he said, smiling blandly, and keeping his eyes bent upon her face while speaking. "It would be a very incongruous union! You had better give it up, madam. Besides, there is an obstacle in the way."

"An obstacle?" she echoed.

"That is what I said."

"Will you be good enough to tell me what it is?" she asked with polished sarcasm.

"Certainly. I have met Mr. Rascaille before. If I am not mistaken, he is already a married man."

Mrs. Ballantyne started out of her chair, a livid pallor overspread her face, and she caught her breath sharply.

"No, no," she cried; "you must be mistaken."

"Not in one thing—that he was married when I knew him, several years ago. But his wife may have died since then. I think it is very probable, for he was said to treat her cruelly."

A lightning-like gleam came into madam's eyes. For a moment she glared about her like some wild animal at bay. Then her usually cool self-possession returned.

"If the wife of whom you speak is dead," said she, half scornfully, "no real impediment to the marriage exists, after all."

"I have told you enough to prove that this man is no fitting husband for your stepdaughter."

"Perhaps."

"Moreover, I know him to be exactly what his name would imply—a rascal!"

Mrs. Ballantyne shrugged her shoulders impatiently.

"Pray, let us drop the subject, Mr. Raynor," she said in her most dulcet tones. "I feel assured there is some mistake here, and Mr. Rascaille is not the person you take him to be at all. You will be convinced of the fact yourself very soon, I have not the slightest doubt."

Then she leaned forward with her white hands folded in her lap, in the graceful pose of a person listening attentively.

"Was not that a beautiful strain, Mr. Raynor?" she murmured, rapturously watching Miss Lamont's fingers as they danced over the keys. "Isabel has a decided talent for music."

"And you have a decided talent for intrigue," thought Max, but he was too polite to say it.

He had witnessed quite enough to convince him of one thing—that Mrs. Ballantyne was a desperate and a wholly unprincipled woman.

"She is evidently in this Mr. Rascaille's power in some way," he decided, after long and anxious thought upon the subject. "I can't conceive how, but the fact is patent enough. Rascaille intends to take advantage of her fear, and butter his own bread while he can. This dear little Beatrice is an heiress in her own right, I understand. There lies the whole secret of his persecutions. But I'll baffle him yet."

He was smoking his cigar in the shrubbery next morning when he stumbled upon Beatrice, sitting all by herself in an arbor and looking as if she hadn't a friend in the whole world. She colored up at sight of him, and held out one of her dimpled white hands. Raynor threw away his cigar, and sat down beside her. This meeting had come about exactly as he could have wished.

"I am afraid you are very unhappy," he said gently.

She drew a long, sobbing breath, but did not reply.

"Are you not rejoiced to be home again?" he persisted.

"I am rejoiced to see Ralph," she returned evasively.

He glanced pityingly into her white face.

"I see very plainly how it is," he exclaimed; "you are afraid of Rascaille! Has he renewed his old persecutions?"

"No; but I am sure he is only waiting an opportunity."

"And Mrs. Ballantyne is still determined that you shall marry him?"

"She is. I heard her tell Isabel so as I was passing her door this morning."

Raynor clenched his teeth, and found some difficulty in refraining from clasping that poor, trembling figure to his heart.

"My poor child," he said, "take courge. That woman shall be foiled in her unnatural whim. Trust me for that. Ralph and I have pledged ourselves to help you, and I am sure we can do it."

He said very much more to comfort her, and finally left her in a quite cheerful frame of mind.

A week wore on. Max Raynor kept his eyes and ears open. He could not afford to lose a single trick in the desperate game he was playing.

Of course he made some discoveries. In the first place, he became convinced of what he had only half suspected previously—namely, that Isabel Lamont, with madam's sanction and approval, was laying very earnest siege to his own heart—or rather to his bank-stock. He smiled quietly in his sleeve, and met her advances more than half-way. His second discovery was of far greater importance. By means of a steady though covert watch which he kept upon Mrs. Ballantyne's movements he soon became aware that that lady was far more intimate with Mr. Rascaille than she had any right to be. The two took long walks together at hours when they were not likely to be observed, and were often surprised in secret consultations.

He was strolling by himself very early one morning when he came upon two figures in the shrubbery. It was Mrs. Ballantyne and Rascaille. High words had evidently passed between them, for madam looked flushed and angry, and Rascaille shook a folded paper in her face just as Raynor drew near, and cried, in a sneering tone of voice:

"Rave as you will, my lady, so long as I have this document in my possession I hold you in the hollow of my hand."

These words had barely passed his lips when he heard Raynor's step on the gravel-path. He started and looked around. A sudden pallor overspread his face; he thrust the paper into his pocket and slunk away without uttering another word.

Mrs. Ballantyne's eyes gleamed like steal. Her face grew purple, and the nails cut deep into the very flesh of her clenched hand. But, making a violent effort, she almost immediately recovered her usual composure. She greeted Raynor with a charming smile.

"I did not know that you were such an early riser," she said sweetly.

"I am not—often."

"Ah?" giving him a swift glance. "I hope your ramble is nearly ended? I hope you are ready to escort me back to the house?"

"Quite ready, madam."

She took his arm.

"That tiresome Rascaille," she murmured as they strolled onward. "He and I are perpetually quarreling. It's doubtful if we think alike on any one subject. This morning it was the proper soil for crocus-bulbs. He insists on a sandy loam! The idea! What does the man know about flower-gardening?"

"What, indeed?" chimed in Raynor, smiling to himself—not at the idea, but at madam's ready wit.

Later in the day he went with Ralph into the library for a confidential chat.

"You are quite willing I should speak freely concerning family affairs?" he began abruptly.

"Certainly," replied Ralph.

"Then, since madam is so partial to Rascaille, why don't she marry him herself, instead of forcing him upon poor Beatrice?"

The young man laughed.

"That matter can be readily explained," he said. "My father was peculiar in his notions. Although he married a second time himself, and a widow, he did not approve of that sort of thing. If my stepmother should marry a third time she would forfeit three-fourths of what was bequeathed to her."

"Ah?"

Raynor turned away his face, and remained thoughtfully silent for some minutes. When he did speak again it was on a wholly different subject.

"Rascaille carries about him a paper that I would give my right hand to possess," he muttered.

"Indeed," said Ralph.

"Yes."

The eyes of the two men met.

"The possession of that paper means freedom for Beatrice," Raynor whispered.

Ralph turned very pale.

"I know what you mean," he said after a long pause, "and think it might be accomplished."

"How?"

"Rascaille keeps his valuables hidden at night under his pillow. I happened once to see him place them there."

"Does he lock his door?"

"Yes. But there is a balcony outside the window. One could get in by means of that. Of course, he sleeps with his window open such sultry nights as we are having now."

They looked at each other again.

"I am determined to get possession of that paper," said Raynor slowly. "Can I count upon you?"

"Of course you can, if Beatrice's happiness can be gained so easily."

They made the attempt that very night, waiting until the house was perfectly still. Raynor in his naked feet posted himself outside Rascaille's bedroom-door, while Ralph, who knew the way so much better, was to steal in at the window and unlock the door to his friend.

It was dreary waiting there, and Raynor's heart was in his mouth. But at last the key clicked noiselessly in the lock, the door swung open, and Ralph's hand grasped his own.

"All right so far, Max," whispered the young man. "Rascaille was accommodating enough to leave the key in the lock, or I might have been troubled to find it. I don't think we have disturbed him."

Now came the most difficult task of all—the withdrawing of the coveted paper from under the sleeping man's pillow—and this was Raynor's part of the business.

He stole noiselessly into the room and approached the bed. He had nearly reached it when the sleeper stirred suddenly, breathed hard once or twice, and sat upright.

"Who's there?" he cried.

Raynor slid to the floor and waited breathlessly. "Who's there?" repeated Rascaille. Then a pistol clicked sharply, and exploded the next instant—whether by accident or design Raynor never knew.

That pistol shot decided his course of action. He sprang to his feet, snatched the weapon from Rascaille's hand before the latter had any intimation of his design, and struck him a stunning blow over the head with the butt.

The villain fell backward, groaning heavily.

"Quick, Ralph!" cried Raynor. "Bring a light from your room."

Ralph darted off, and Raynor thrust his hand under the pillow of the insensible man. When he withdrew it his fingers clasped a large morocco pocketbook.

"This must contain what I am after," he muttered.

He was right. When Ralph came hurrying in with the light, and he opened the pocketbook, almost the first object his eyes rested upon was the identical paper Rascaille had fluttered so triumphantly in Mrs. Ballantyne's face.

It proved to be the marriage-certificate of Jules Lamont and Martha Dempster, and was dated some twenty years back.

While Raynor stared at it a light broke suddenly upon his mind. He feverishly turned over the other contents of the pocketbook.

They were such as to convince him beyond a doubt that Mr. Rascaille and Jules Lamont were one and the same person. If so, and there had been no divorce, madam could not have been legally married to Ralph's father.

"That's it!" he cried, shouting for joy. "That's the secret of this Rascaille's power. I see it all now."

"What's the secret?" said Ralph, staring at him. "What have you found in that pocketbook?"

He was about to answer, but hurried footsteps were heard to approach. Of course the whole house had been alarmed by the pistol-shot.

"Nobody must cross the threshold of this room!" he exclaimed excitedly.

He sprang to the door, and there met Mrs. Ballantyne face to face.

"Send the servants back to their beds again," he said authoritatively. "Then I wish to see you alone in the library."

Something in his white, stern face caused the frightened woman to obey him without a word of questioning.

When he went downstairs presently, after having assured himself that Rascaille would soon recover from the blow he had dealt him, he found madam excitedly pacing the floor. He told her all. The guilty creature denied nothing. She flung herself at his feet and begged for mercy.

"I thought Jules was dead when I married Beatrice's father!" she cried; "I did indeed. When he came here, and by-and-bye fell in love with Beatrice and demanded her hand in marriage, I dared not refuse him."

Raynor said very little; but he insisted that Rascaille, alias Lamont, should be dismissed the house the first thing in the morning.

"He cannot harm you without compromising himself," Raynor said, the ludicrous side of the affair now coming uppermost; "he has been a too-much-married man himself for that."

Of course Rascaille stormed and raved on coming to himself, and, learning the turn affairs had taken, he left the house soon after daylight, threatening the most terrible things. In less than an hour he was brought back a corpse. The horse on which he rode away had taken fright and thrown him. Over his dead body Raynor clasped hands with Mrs. Ballantyne.

"Heaven has ended this affair in its own way," he said solemnly. "It is better so. I am not disposed to be hard with you. Show yourself truly sorry for the past and anxious to do better in the future, and the secret of your life shall remain a secret between us."

Of course, she was ready enough to promise all that. After the lapse of a few weeks she and Isabel quitted Rosedale for an extended Continental tour. Neither Ralph nor Beatrice ever knew the real facts concerning her. Raynor married Beatrice. So at last our gentle heroine was brought out of the darkness into the marvelous light of perfect love and happiness.

IT IS one of the characteristics of a good man to dispense liberally and enjoy abstemiously the goods he knows he may lose and must leave.

THE CAT is a wonderful builder; we have seen a cat run up a house in less than five minutes.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

J. B. B.—B having, at the demand of A, announced his hand, and called it three queens, A having said: "If you have three queens the pot is yours," and B having then taken in the pot, A cannot now look at his cards, and, finding a full hand therein, claim the pot—provided that B has three queens. It had ceased to be a question what A held, he having relinquished the pot. The only question was whether or not B had three queens or better. The time for A to have seen his hand was before he abandoned the pot by talking about his opponent's cards. There was no need of any talk. Having been called himself, it was not for him to ask what B had. Poker required him, as the called player, to show his own cards at once, and B would next, as the caller, have had to show his. Then A would have won, although he had not known what he held; for in showing his cards to B he would have shown them fully to himself. There is no necessity for any such dispute as this, and he who causes it deserves to be punished for his tomfoolery if, as is so often the case, he knew what cards he had, and was trifling with his opponent; for his carelessness, if he did not see what he had; and for his disregard of poker law alike if he was fooling or was simply neglectful of his own interests. It is a maxim of poker that "Mistakes go," and are at the expense of their makers. There is but one exception to this, and that is that B could have said that he held four aces when he held but a pair of deuces, or could have called his four aces a pair of deuces, without prejudice to his right to show his cards and win. This, it will be observed, is assigning a value to his own hand, and not to his opponent's. It is covered by an express and special rule of poker. There is no rule, and there never has been one, permitting a man to acknowledge himself beaten by certain cards and afterwards to claim the pot.

B., Minneapolis.—Assuredly, the world can raise soldiers enough to outnumber the population of France; and if the bet was made in the way you put it, B. wins. Your second communication, which changes the bet so that it requires us to decide whether "the standing armies of the present time outnumber the whole population of France," is very different from the first. You ought to know that no one can tell what the standing armies of the world at the present time amount to in numbers, and therefore that such a bet cannot be decided except by someone who will decide it on a presumption, instead of upon knowledge. To whoever induced you to forward the second communication we will suggest that in fairness to the bettors as well as to whoever is to arbitrate, a statement by both bettors should always be submitted. We cannot permit you to "withdraw your first statement," which was: "B bets that the world could raise soldiers enough to outnumber the population of France."

CONSTANT READER, Richmond.—1. That is what we mean when we give the decision. We mean something more than perhaps you have as yet comprehended, viz., that, whereas 1 to 0 is two to one or fifty or one thousand to one in any case in which you can imagine fractional parts from one-half up to a thousandth, it is not two to one in a case where there can be no proportion, as in a baseball score of 1 to 0, because there are no half runs. Therefore, instead of beating by the great odds of two to one, a club that wins by 1 to 0 does so by the least possible amount known to the game. 2. It is and it is not so counted. The League does not count it at all. The American Association counts it for the purpose of making up averages.

J. D. R., Phillipsburg.—1. There is no law in Pennsylvania prohibiting pool for drinks, we believe, unless in the case of minors. 2. A man who runs pool-tables for drinks or for any other purpose can probably be made to pay the customary license for billiard-tables. Pool is billiards, and a pool-table is a billiard-table. 3. We should not regard it as advisable. The sentiment of communities should be respected, as far as is compatible with one's ideas of personal rights or dignity. 4. We suggest to you that it would be simply prudence on your part to consult a man familiar with Pennsylvania law, as these are law points, and laws vary in different States and localities.

C. J. W., Leavenworth.—On your statement, we can give no other decision than that A loses. When it is not otherwise stipulated in bets, making a shot in a game of pool or at any other kind of billiards means a counting stroke. There is nothing in your note to justify a departure from the established rule of deciding a matter of this kind. If B will admit that what he was betting on was simply the difficulty of accomplishing a certain stroke, and that he never contemplated that the risk of the cue-ball going into the pocket should form an element of the wager, that will settle the matter in A's favor—indeed, there will then be no dispute.

F. K., Albany.—J. K. loses both bets. Cleveland for Governor did not have even 150,000 majority. A majority means more than half of all the votes cast. A plurality means an excess over the next highest candidate, where there are three or more candidates. Cleveland had a plurality of 192,854, which was a qualified majority—that is, a majority over Folger—but not strictly a majority. Had the bet been "a majority over Folger" or "over the next highest," that would have made the election, for the purpose of this bet, a contest between two candidates, the votes for all the others being excluded, and J. K. would then have won.

J. M. P., Rochester.—The announced origin of most things is purely fanciful. The word "demijohn" in that shape never could have had a traceable origin. It has come into existence through ignorance and carelessness, as Worcester has come to be pronounced Wooster almost everywhere, Greenwich (Grin), and so on. In olden times a big stone bottle was called dame jeanne in the French language. It was pronounced dam-jhaun. It is easy to see how by English people who saw it in print it might have come to be pronounced first dam me-jennie, and finally dem johns.

H. J. M., Boston.—1. J. L. Sullivan never offered anyone $5,000 to spar with him. 2. There were no stakes fought for by Sullivan and Tug Wilson. There was a private understanding as to the division of the gate-money on that occasion, Sullivan and Madden on one side and Wilson and Chambers on the other. Wilson's share was over $3,000 and less than $4,000. 3. The published offer of Sullivan was to pay Wilson $1,000 if he failed to knock him out.

LUKE BLACKBURN.—The proper position of the feet in the stirrups is almost a matter of choice and comfort with the equestrian when mounted. The cavalryman is instructed to place his feet in the stirrups with the ball of the foot resting thereon, thereby giving the foot an easy spring, while the jockey almost invariably places the hollow of the foot full into it. The gentleman rider should place his feet like the jockey.

A SUBSCRIBER, Pullman.—Jim Mace personally informed us that on two occasions forfeit-money was posted for a match between him and Tom Sayers, but that both times the latter declined to go on with it when the time came to ratify a match by signing articles and posting more money. Mace also stated that on the first occasion he allowed Sayers to withdraw his deposit, but the next time he took the money. That's all we know about it.

H. H. G., Waverly.—This subject has been under discussion for a century or more. This paper has decided but one way since it was started, thirty odd years ago. We have nothing to do with the decisions of others. If you desire the decision of this paper, we gave it some weeks ago. If you desire that of other sporting papers, write to them. The result may open your eyes. See reply to "F. K., Albany."

A. A., Flattsburg.—1. Bingham not having started, the bet was void, and the money should have been returned. Private bets on footraces are not play or pay, unless the parties thereto mutually agree to make them so. 2. Persons who buy mutual pool tickets on a horse that does not start have their money refunded, and in some instances bookmakers (who make rules to suit themselves) also refund the money put up on non-starters.

ALLEGHENY.—We do not answer "Yes" or "No," when requested. According to the decision of the State Department at Washington, D. C., as communicated to THE CLIPPER ten or eleven years ago, a male child of American citizens can, if he is born while his mother is abroad on a pleasure or business trip, become eligible to the Presidency of the United States.

AMATEURS.—The Great Long Island Stakes, run annually at the Fall meeting of the Coney Island Jockey Club, was instituted as a four-mile heat race. In 1880 Ferida won in two straight heats; in 1881 Glenmore won, walking over for the third heat after Elias Lawrence, who won the first heat, had been drawn; and in 1882 Bushwhacker won in two straight heats.

N. F. C., New Bedford.—Such paragraphs are continually going the rounds. It is impossible to say who are the richest men in the world. Any attempt to do so is nothing but guesswork. It is a private matter, not accessible to the public; and it is doubtful if, even were a Vanderbilt to undertake to estimate his wealth, he could come within millions of the true figure.

J. W. F.—1. The team having been a private one, and the property belonging to the members in common, now that the members are equally divided, we see no way out of the difficulty other than by making an equal division of effects. There is nothing, save, perhaps, a sense of honor, to prevent those parties from forming a team and pulling under the same name.

G. E. M., Merrick.—1. Dan Noble. 2. The owner, whether author or purchaser, registers it with the Librarian of Congress by paying one dollar, and that is supposed to protect him in the enjoyment and profits of it by excluding anyone else from publishing it without his permission.

C. S., Chatham.—A, having bet that the gray horse would come in second, won his wager when the horse finished first, the meaning of the bet being second or better in a race of three or more competitors, the same as if he had bought the horse for a place in a mutual-pool room or from a bookmaker.

AL., Rochester.—No. The alleged performance was accomplished in an irregular manner, under very peculiar circumstances, the time was variously reported all the way from 19m. 23s. to 20m. 5s., and no steps have been taken by anyone concerned to make public the actual facts.

A. A.—1 and 2. It all depends upon a person's knowledge of the art of rowing. A round-bottomed boat is the faster, but a flat-bottom is the safer boat for a novice to fool with. 3. Apply to a builder in person or by letter.

CIGAR-SHOP.—Certainly B can raise it. A had in one sense called the man next ahead of him, but him only. He could not call the man who was to bet after him, and practically he could not "call" anybody. Even the "straddler" could raise, whether B did or not.

RAILROAD SHOPS, Albany.—They are not brothers-in-law, save in being so called as a matter of courtesy from the fact that the wife of one man is the sister-in-law of the other man. Strictly, the two men are not related.

J. J. MCF., New Orleans.—1. You can address Ruddock of Boston or Wm. Oliver of this city, in our care. Both are excellent builders and either should give full satisfaction. 2. Principally cedar boats. Waters & Son of Troy are paper-boat builders.

NO SIGNATURE.—There are several gymnasiums in this city, the principal ones being John Woods, East 28th street, and that connected with the Young Men's Christian Association, 23d street and 4th avenue.

W. O.—Employers cannot be compelled to pay for labor not performed, whether on legal holidays or at other times, unless there is a special contract to the contrary, or unless the employers are the government.

J. M., Hope Church.—Maud S.'s fastest mile trotting time, 2:10¼, which heads the record, was made at Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1881. See page 36, CLIPPER ALMANAC for 1883.

SURCHASE, Washington.—Four aces do not beat four sixes or four of any other denomination at poker-dice, unless so agreed upon.

READER.—1. The Boston team in 1881 included Whitney, Mathews and Fox, pitchers; Snyder and Deasley, catchers; Morrill, Burdock and Sutton on the bases; Barnes, short-stop; and Hornung, Lewis and Crowley in the outfield. Fox, Snyder, Barnes, Lewis and Crowley did not play with the Bostons in 1882, the vacancies being filled by Rowen as catcher and right-fielder, Wise short-stop and Hotaling centre-field. 2. The Chicago team in 1870 were Pinkham, Meyerle and Burns, pitchers; Hodes and King, catchers; McAtee, Wood and Meyerle on the bases; Duffy, short-stop; and Treacy, Cuthbert and Flynn in the outfield.

CONSTANT READER.—You have been particular to state what it was that F. B. bet. You should have been as particular to state what it was that M. M. bet. The latter may have wagered that he would win the game of pool, just as you say F. B. bet that he himself would win it. If M. M. expressly bet that F. B. would not win it, and without stipulating in plain words that he himself would win it, pay the money to M. M.; for in that case M. M. took the negative of F. B.'s proposition, not the converse of it.

J. N. B., St. Joseph.—The game could only be drawn if the club that went second to the bat had scored the same number of runs as the other club. If the club second at bat had scored one or more runs than the club first at the bat, the score of the game would be the total number of runs made, without regard to the score of the last equal inning.

CONSTANT READER, Brooklyn.—1. Bill Poole and John Morrissey fought on Amos-street dock, this city, July 27, 1854. 2. Poole was fatally shot between 12 midnight and 1 A. M. on the morning of Feb. 25, 1855, died March 8, and was buried March 11.

OLD BOWERY SPORT.—1. William Shedman defeated Joseph Snyder at or near Baltimore, Md., for $100, July 25, 1870. They fought 16 rounds in 47 minutes. 2. We are not certain that it is the same party, but believe it is.

R. M. S., Harrisburg.—The umpire's decision was wrong. The base-runner was not out if some part of his person was touching the base. The point has frequently been raised, and is not a novel one.

PASSAIC.—1. It would be a difficult matter to decide. The quartet exhibited a falling-off in their individual play in 1876. 2. See the history of the Boston Club in our next issue. 3. No. He has many superiors in that position. 4. James O'Rourke.

T. AND H., Brooklyn.—According to the rules of the ring, all bets on the result of a fight that is begun go the same way as the main stakes, which in this case were drawn.

CLIFF W., Washington.—The view you take of the matter is the correct one. The Columbias having failed to win more medals than the Potomacs did, the party who bet they would win more loses.

W. W. G., Bethel.—It is enough to make an object-ball go to the cushion. Sending that or the cue-ball alone to the cushion is the option, unless otherwise agreed upon.

MANCHESTER.—The decision of the wager did not rest on what the horse was to be sent to do, but upon the time he would make; and as he did not beat 2:10¾, A loses.

W. F. W.—It would require some time and some trouble to answer those questions, which we would prefer to avoid unless they are of importance to you.

B. B., Brattleboro.—Previous to Saturday, Sept. 29, last the fastest three mile sculling time on record was 20m. 3s., made by G. H. Hosmer at Hulton, Pa., Sept. 28.

C. H. L., Portland.—As the course was considerably short of three miles in length, and as there was really no half-mile stake, the bet should be drawn.

CONSTANT READER, Pleasant.—We cannot give you positive information on the subject until we receive answers to letters written to the parties referred to.

J. R. M., Topeka.—Maud S.'s best time is 2:10¼, and as you bet that the mare trotted inside 1:71 you win, those figure representing 2:11.

F. A. J., Bloomington.—1. The fact of your having participated in a race for cash prizes renders you ineligible to compete as an amateur athlete. 2. See CLIPPER ALMANAC.

CONSTANT.—1. Hanlan defeated both Hawdon and Elliott in England in 1879. He was beaten by Ross and others on the Seekonk River in June, 1880.

T. F. M., Spencer.—1. B wins. The umpire was justified in deciding the game a draw on account of darkness, the score being tied. 2. He can, if he does not intertere with the other runner.

C. R. M., Westminster.—1. You had better address the managers of the different professional clubs, stating your qualifications. 2. No.

INQUIRER, Waterford.—In the race between Hanlan and Courtney at Lachine the latter had a slight lead at the end of three miles. He led for a short distance only.

A SAILOR, Chicago.—Patsy Reardon defeated Bob Travers (the black), $500 a side, 7 rounds, 37m., first day, and 53 rounds, 4h. 5m., next day, July 15, 16, 1862.

WILL N., Williamsburg.—You can find what you want in "The Manual of Sporting Rules," advertised by Ed. James in our business columns.

O. A. C., Hatfield.—A ball can be pitched so that it will curve inward or outward.

J. W. T., Chester.—It is an impossible feat for a pitcher to accomplish.

W. S. P., Chambersburg.—The Merritt Club defeated the Trentons in four out of six games, and had a better record when it disbanded.

J. H. M., Rochester.—The Providence-Philadelphia game on July 4 was decided by the umpire in favor of the Philadelphias.

BOSTON.—Jay-Eye-See is a black gelding, foaled in 1878, sire Dictator dam Midnight, by Pilot Jr.

H.—Yankee Sullivan's right name is stated to have been Frank Ambrose Murray.

T. J. R., Joliet.—Consult Wm. C. Dele, Pullman Athletic Club, Pullman, Ill.

F. P. M., Pittsburg.—There are nine floors in The Tribune Building, this city. A loses.

READER, Washington.—The bet should be drawn. See answer to "Al., Rochester."

ED. B., Portsmouth.—Your question is not sufficiently explicit. Please repeat it.

G. A. E., Rochester.—Maud S.'s second fastest mile time, 2:10¾, was made in harness, against time, at Pittsburg, Pa., July 13, 1881.

B. O. T., Boston.—Peddler's soap is entirely out of our line, and we are unable to answer the question.

PATRON, Albany.—The fastest twenty-mile bicycle time on record is 58m. 34s., made by F. Lees in England recently.

M. H. J., Brooklyn.—It depends upon what the game was, and its name you have not given. If euchre, jack wins the deal.

J. S., Northampton.—He is to give him the very next card if, on the draw, the dealer exposes a player's card.

W. D. M., Ashtabula.—1. He need show only enough to have justified the breaking of the pot. 2. The breaker makes the first bet.

H. T. F., Wilmington.—The dealer having had but one to go, the Jack turned up put him out. He could have given the beggar four.

P. B.—Four-of-a-kind is the highest hand in draw-poker, unless it has been expressly agreed to play straight flushes.

BIKE, Boston.—The condition made by your friend saves his money and makes the bet a draw.

J. R. M., Salisbury.—You fail to mention distance, or whether running, trotting or pacing.

GOOD WILL, Baltimore.—D and E are the two lowest. C's jack, no matter when taken in, counted before E's low.

T. S., Kingston.—You will find the records in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC. H. wins the bet.

T. C. O'L., Detroit.—Maud S. has trotted a mile in 2:10¼, the fastest time recorded. Jay-Eye-See's fastest record is 2:10¾.

C. A. T., Nevada.—The fastest recorded time for a half-mile dash on the running turf is 0:47¾, by Olitipa, at Saratoga, N. Y., in 1874.

C. S., Emporium.—The fastest three-mile sculling time on record is 20m. 3s., made by G. H. Hosmer at Pittsburg, Pa.

CLIPPER READER, Sunbury.—Address Ed. James, whose address you can see in advertisement.

TYRO, Indianapolis.—A was right in combining the sevens.

PORTLAND.—The card would cost $20.80 for three months.

LEXINGTON, Newark.—B won. He did weigh 192lb.

C. F. H., Atlantic City.—There is a run of four in 8, 6, 7, 9.

J. P. H., Passaic.—Dexter's best time is 2:17¼.

A AND B, St. Louis.—The goddess side is the head.

A SUBSCRIBER.—John C. Heenan was born in West Troy, N. Y.

W. H., Philadelphia.—He has a decided curve.

M. L. H., Fremont.—He is entitled to second base.

ABERDEEN.—Ross Barnes is living in Rockford, Ill.

E. S. L., New Haven.—See answer to "J. H. M., Rochester."

ELMIRA.—You will find it in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

During the past two weeks we have called attention to the fact that THE CLIPPER was advertised for sale, and explained that this sale was necessitated through the death of the late proprietor, Mr. Frank Queen, requiring a legal settlement of the estate. We are now able to announce that the sale will not take place, the administratrix and the heirs having agreed upon a plan of settlement by which the paper will be continued under their proprietorship. Further particulars will be published in a week or two.

THE NEW CLUB of the Union League from Brooklyn will put strong team in the field next season. They have already signed four players and have several on trial. Their grounds will be located in the Eastern District, about twenty five minutes' ride from Grand street or Broadway ferry. All communications should be addressed to Chas. Endler, 225 Graham avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A GAME was played Oct. 6 in Peoria, Ill., between the local professionals and the Allegheny. The visitors, who won by 12 to 7, were on their way home from Omaha, Neb., where they had recently defeated the Union Pacific Club by scores of 6 to 2 and 10 to 7.

THE DETROITS defeated the Eclipse Club Oct. 8 in Louisville, Ky., by 6 to 5.

METROPOLITAN vs. PROVIDENCE.

The first game this season between the above-named clubs was played Oct. 3 at the Polo Grounds in the presence of a large assemblage, and resulted in a well-earned victory for the Metropolitans, although they were weakened by the unavoidable absence of Holbert, Kennedy and O'Rourke. A wild throw by Esterbrook and a fumble by Roseman gave the visitors one run in the first inning. Radbourn, who was left after making a three-bagger in the first, got in a run in the fourth inning, when he was helped home by a passed ball and a wild pitch. The Mets earned two runs on two-baggers by Orr and Roseman and singles by Keefe and Nelson, and obtained the winning run on errors by Irwin, Radbourn and Sweeny. Joe Start gave way to Sweeny in the third inning. The umpire seemingly favored the visitors, especially in calling balls and strikes. Keefe's effective pitching was the chief feature of the contest. These two clubs contended again, with a similar result, on the Polo Grounds Oct. 4, when the attendance was small owing to the cold weather. The visitors led off with five unearned runs in the first inning, although Lynch was batted but twice safely. Keefe then exchanged positions with Lynch, and, being better supported in the field, held the Providence down to one additional run, which was scored in the fourth inning on a two-bagger by Hines and a muff by Orr. The Mets made seven runs on four safe hits, together with bases on balls given Nelson, Brady and Crane, and four costly errors by Nava. The game was called on account of darkness in the seventh inning, leaving the score as follows:

ATHLETIC vs. CLEVELAND.

The initial contest between the above-named clubs took place Oct. 4 in Philadelphia, Pa., and proved to be an exciting struggle for superiority. Jones and Sawyer pitched for their respective clubs, the former proving the more effective. The Clevelands won by their superior fielding and timely hitting. Twice during the game the Athletics had three men on bases, and on both occasions they got runs in, but in each of these innings two men were left on bases, when one good hit would have decided the contest in their favor. It was too cold for sharp fielding. Evans and Bushong were injured early in the game, and gave way to Geer and McCormick. Blakiston played with the Athletics in the absence of Stovey. Score:

ATHLETIC vs. PROVIDENCE.

The above-named clubs met for the first time this season Oct. 5 in Philadelphia, Pa., the American Association champions then sustaining their most humiliating defeat of the season in the presence of about two thousand people. Radbourn retired the champions for no runs and only three scattering safe hits, while seven of them struck out off him. Mathews was batted with ease by the visitors, Carroll leading with four safe hits, including two three-baggers. The visitors fielded sharply throughout. Two-liners caught by Stovey, on one of which he made a double-play, and a difficult running-catch by Birchall were the redeeming features of the Athletics' play:

CINCINNATI vs. CHICAGO.

The above-named clubs—ex-champions of the American Association and League respectively—played a series of games last week in Cincinnati, O. The opening contest took place Oct. 1, and resulted in a decisive victory for the Chicagos. Home-runs were made by Dalrymple and Gore, the latter, however, being decided out for failing to touch third base. The errors made by the Cincinnatis were very costly. Goldsmith was effective, holding the home-team down to five hits and striking out nine men. Errors by Pfeffer and Anson gave the Cincinnatis their only run. The attendance was good, although the weather was unfavorable. Score:

The above result was reversed Oct. 2, the Chicagos then being blanked by the Cincinnatis. Mountjoy, the new pitcher of the Cincinnatis, proved puzzling to the Chicagos, who made but three scattering safe hits and only once reached third base. Corcoran, who was poorly supported behind the bat and in the field, was hit hard in almost every inning. McPhee's batting and Powers' catching were the chief features.

NEW YORK vs. CINCINNATI.

The above-named clubs played for the first time Oct. 6 in Cincinnati, O., the games scheduled for the two preceding days having been postponed on account of rain. The visitors won with ease, a result mainly due to the excellent batting and base-running of Ward, who made three of the five runs credited to his club. The Cincinnatis earned their only run on a two-baser by Mountjoy and a single by Carpenter. Troy's second-base play was the fielding-feature. Score:

ST. LOUIS vs. ALLEGHENY.

An exhibition game between the above-named clubs was played Oct. 7 in St. Louis, Mo. Davis of Lynn, Mass., made his first appearance with the home-team and showed up well in the pitcher's position. Tom Mansell was credited with four safe hits off Barr, including a home-run. At the close of the game there was a foot-race of one hundred yards between Walter Latham and Mike Mansell to decide the long-mooted question of superiority in running. Latham won easily. THE ATHLETIC CLUB

Winners of the American Championship.

The Athletics, by their many glorious victories during the past twenty seasons, have won for Philadelphia an enviable status in the baseball world. Their various nines have ranked among the most distinguished of the exponents of the national game, and have traveled to almost every part of the United States to measure their strength with every opponent on the diamond, winning reputation and creating admiration for their professional and personal merits. In view of the fact of the Athletics having recently won the championship of the American Association, a retrospective glance at their doings may now prove timely and interesting. We purpose to give our readers some of the incidents connected with the history of the Athletic Club from the date of its organization, premising that it would require too much space to chronicle all the interesting details of its varied career.

The Athletic Club was organized May 31, 1859, by a number of gentlemen, members of a musical society in Philadelphia. The following were among the original members of the club: Col. D. W. C. Moore, Col. Thomas Fitzgerald Dr. A. G. Heston, John J. Heisler, Wm. H. Cunnington, Nathan Berkenstock, Wm. Ernst, Chas. A. Denny, G. H. Troutman, H. W. Karcher, John Conard, B. T. Croasdale, W. Coulston, H. Bartine and C. Warner. To Wm. H. Cunnington—now a well-known journalist of Philadelphia—is due the credit of being the first to suggest the name of "Athletic" for the club. They began by playing townball, but the superiority of baseball soon became evident, and as it began to rise into favor and attract general attention, the Athletic was reorganized April 7, 1860, as a baseball club. From the score-book of the club, it appears that the first match-game of the Athletics was with the Mercantile Club Aug. 1, 1860. Seven innings were played, the Atnletics winning by a score of 75 to 26. The pitcher of the Mercantiles was Wilkins, in after years widely-known as the short-stop of the Athletics. Berkenstock led in batting with ten runs, including four home-runs. The game was played on the cricket grounds at Camac Woods as it was then called, in the neighborhood now of Thirteenth street and Montgomery avenue, where the Athletics made their headquarters for three succeeding seasons.

In 1861 the war drew away many of the Athletic's members and supporters, and consequently but few games were played. The hopes of its founders were considerably brightened that season by the accession of Tom Pratt, Dick McBride, Hicks Hayhurst, "Ike" Wilkins and other promising players. The Athletics during the first two years of their existence as a baseball club, found it a difficult matter to maintain their organization intact, the members dropping off, one by one, until but a few were left. In April, 1862, the United—a flourishing young club—was induced to merge with the Athletics. The consolidation infused new life into the Athletic Club. The chief feature of that season was a series of games with the Olympic Club for the championship of Philadelphia. Each club won a game, but the deciding contest was postponed indefinitely by rain. The grounds at Camac Woods being needed for building purposes, the Athletics were compelled to move their headquarters to Seventeenth and Master streets, where they remained during 1863. That season they made their first trip, playing in Newark, Brooklyn and Hoboken, where McBride took the place of Pratt as pitcher, and gave promise of his future excellence in that position.

In 1864 the Athletics again changed their base of operations, playing on the grounds extending from Twenty-fifth to Twenty-seventh and from Master to Jefferson streets, and which they afterwards occupied from 1871 to 1877 inclusive. A portion is now covered with buildings, but the remaining section—which even now is large enough for all practical purposes—was again used this season by the Athletic Club, being inclosed by its managers—Messrs. Mason, Sharsig and Simmons—who have made it one of the finest in the country. The Athletics from 1865 to 1870, inclusive, played on the grounds at Seventeenth street and Columbia avenue, which they had thoroughly fitted up and placed in order. No club did so much towards extending the popularity of baseball, or made such rapid progress towards gaining the highest pinnacle of fame as the Athletics did in 1865, when they played and won more games and made larger scores than any club ever did before, and in fact no other club did so much to popularize baseball in towns and villages where it was hitherto comparatively unknown. Al. Reach was the only new man on the nine. The Athletics lost only three games this season, including two with the Atlantics of Brooklyn, which caused great excitement in baseball circles in Philadelphia, the partisans of each club claiming the championship. The Athletics played two games in Danville, Pa., Oct. 20, defeating one club in the morning by a score of 101 to 8, and another club in the afternoon by 162 to 11. Al. Reach made thirty-four runs in the two games—a good day's work. The Athletics also took part in two games on one day so late in the season as Dec. 9, the last two innings of the afternoon's contest being played in a heavy snowstorm.

The Athletics had a very successful season in 1866, when their nine included McBride, Dockney, Berkenstock, Reach, Pike, Wilkins, Sensenderfer, Fisler and Kleinfelder. They played all the strongest clubs in the country and were defeated only twice, once by the Atlantics of Brooklyn and once by the Unions of Morrisania. The long talked-of game between the Athletics and Atlantics for the championship was announced to take place Oct. 1 on the former's grounds in Philadelphia, the number of people present being estimated as high as 40,000, it being the largest attendance ever witnessed at a baseball game. Inside the inclosure the crowd was immense, and packed so close that there was no room for the players to field. An attempt was, however, made to play the game; but one inning was sufficient to show that it was impossible, and after a vain effort to clear the field both parties reluctantly consented to an adjournment. These two clubs met Oct. 15 in Brooklyn, no previous game in that city ever attracting such a large crowd of spectators. The first six innings were closely contested, but the Atlantics finally won by a score of 27 to 17. The return game between the Athletics and Atlantics was played Oct. 22 in Philadelphia. The price of tickets was placed at one dollar each, and upwards of two thousand people paid this "steep" tariff of admission, while five or six thousand more witnessed the game from the surrounding embankments. Rain and darkness obliged the umpire to call the game at the end of the seventh inning, the victory remaining with the Athletics by the decisive totals of 31 to 12. A dispute about the division of the gate-money prevented the playing of the deciding game of the series between these two clubs that season.

The organization was incorporated as a baseball club April 11, 1866, by a special act of the Pennsylvania Legislature, thus giving it a permanence, and tending to make the members feel more interest in the club's reputation and welfare. Radcliff, Berry and Cuthbert were the additions to the team in 1867, when the Athletics won all but three out of the forty-seven games played with the leading clubs. The Athletics and Atlantics again met twice, and attracted immense assemblages. Each club again won on its own ground. Another dispute arose, and the consequence was the deciding game was not played in 1867. The Athletic's season of 1868 was the most brilliant yet known in the annals of the club. Kleinfelder retired from active play, and Schafer and Foran alternated in the vacant position at right-field. During the season the Athletics encountered and defeated the strongest clubs in the country, and in the three games they lost they were short-handed, and, underrating their opponents, had to pay the penalty of their over-confidence. The Athletics virtually won the professional championship this season, having decisively defeated the Atlantics of Brooklyn twice by the respective scores of 18 to 9 and 37 to 13, and also beating the Cincinnati Reds twice by scores of 20 to 13 and 15 to 12. The only other noteworthy feature of 1868 was the lengthy Western tour made by the club.

The late Frank Queen, proprietor and editor of this paper, in 1868 offered a series of prizes to be contested for by the leading clubs of the country, a gold ball being offered for the champion club, and a gold badge to the player in each position from catcher to right field who had the best batting averages. The official award gave a majority of the prizes to the Athletics, McBride, Radcliff, Fisler, Reach and Sensenderfer having excelled in the respective positions of pitcher, catcher, first-base, second-base and centre-field. The gold ball was also officially awarded to the Athletics as the emblem of championship for the season of 1868, they twice defeating during the following year the Mutuals, the claimants for the honor.

The Athletics in 1869—owing to a combination of untoward circumstances—were not so successful as usual, having lost as many games as they did during the preceding three seasons combined, viz., seven, including three with the Atlantics and two with Cincinnatis. The inability of Wilkins to play and the sickness of McBride during the greater part of the season, doubtless was largely the cause of the Athletics not being so successful as heretofore. McMullin, Meyerle, Heubel and Fulmer were the new men in 1869, when the most remarkable contest was the exhibition one with the Atlantics July 5 in Brooklyn, twenty thousand persons being estimated to be present. The score—51 to 48 in favor of the Atlantics—was the largest on record in a first-class game. The Athletic-Cincinnati game in Philadelphia also attracted a very large attendance.

During 1870 the Athletics played and won more games than any other organization ever did before, their career exhibiting a succession of brilliant victories over the strongest professional and amateur clubs in the country, including a noteworthy victory over the Cincinnati Reds in Cincinnati, and the winning of four out of five games with the Atlantics of Brooklyn—the champion club of the season. Malone, Bechtel, Schafer and Tom Pratt played with the Athletics this season, taking the places of McMullin, Cuthbert, Meyerle and Foran. The Professional Association was organized in 1871, when the Athletics, after a close struggle with the Boston and Chicago Clubs, won the championship. Their champion team that season included McBride, pitcher; Malone, catcher; Fisler, Reach and Meyerle on the bases; Radcliff, short-stop; Cuthbert, Sensenderfer and Heubel in the outfield; and Bechtel and Pratt, substitutes. The Athletics concluded their season Oct. 30 in Brooklyn, by defeating the Chicago White Stockings by a score of 4 to 1. This game will long be remembered by the Athletics with pardonable pride, as by it they won the championship of 1871. The Athletics on this occasion were without the services of Reach, Sensenderfer and Pratt and in fact had but eight men on the ground until the veteran Berkenstock was drafted into service and played right-field. The statement that the Boston Club lost the championship by the unfair and partisan decision of the committee is disproved by the fact that Harry Wright, Nick Young and Alex. Davidson, who constituted the championship committee that year, signed an official communication, dated at Boston, Mass., on Dec. 13, 1871, formally declaring: "We have duly considered the claims and examined the playing record of all clubs contesting for the title of champions of the United States during the past season, and find that the Athletic Baseball Club of Philadelphia presented the best record, and is, therefore, entitled to the honor and title to fly the champion streamer during 1872."

The Athletics commenced the season of 1872 with four new players—Anson and Mack, from the Forest City of Rockford, Treacy from the Chicago Club, and McGeary of the Haymakers; in addition to McBride, Malone, Fisler, Cuthbert, Meyerle and Reach. The club had a remarkably successful career up to September, when the tide of disaster set in against them. The season's reverses included a most decisive defeat by the Mutuals July 13 by a score of 8 to 0, the Athletics then, for the first time on record being disposed of without scoring a run. The second season's play for the professional pennant resulted in the success of the Boston Club, with the Athletics occupying the fourth place of the eleven contestants. During the season of 1873 the club had not that success that the individual strength of its nine deserved. They opened the season with a nine including McBride, Fisler, Anson and McGeary of their team of 1872, and five new players in Clapp and Murnan of the Mansfields of Middletown, Fisher of the Baltimore Club, Sutton of the Forest City of Cleveland and McMullin of the Mutuals. Sensenderfer and Reach were the two substitutes, and their services were frequently called into requisition. The nine, in some respects, were the strongest the Athletics had ever put on the field, and a very successful season was confidently anticipated. Their local rivals—the newly-organized Philadelphia team—proved, however, to be a stumbling-block in the path of the older organization, defeating them in eight out of nine championship games. They were also singularly unfortunate in having their players crippled, and finished third in the race for the championship of the Professional Association.

The club was materially strengthened in 1874 by the addition of Gedney of the Mutuals and Battin, this team being considered strong enough to cope with the Bostons and with their local opponents. In the latter case the estimate proved disagreeably correct to the Philadelphias, who won but a single game in the ten of the series, thus reversing the result of the preceding season's struggle. The Athletics, however, only won two of their ten games with the Bostons, and consequently finished third in the championship race. This year marked an era in the history of baseball since it witnessed the Athletic and Boston Club's

VISIT TO EUROPE.

These missionaries of baseball left Philadelphia July 16 in the steamship Ohio, the entire cabin of which had been engaged for the players and their accompanying friends. The Athletic contingent numbered thirty-eight persons, including the following players: McBride, Clapp, Anson, McGeary, Sutton, Battin, Gedney, McMullin, Murnan, Fisler and Sensenderfer. The tourists arrived safely in Liverpool July 27, and met with uninterrupted success in the seven cricket games played with English and Irish elevens, the eighteen Americans winning with ease every team they played against, with but one exception, when rain caused a draw much in their favor. Fourteen games of baseball were played in which the Athletics and Bostons were the contestants. The Athletics were credited with six victories, having the honor of winning the first and last games played in England and one of the two played on Irish soil. Every game was played as earnestly on both sides as though the championship depended on the result. In the cricket-matches Dick McBride's swift underhand bowling proved very disastrous to the English and Irish batsmen. The Athletic-Boston excursionists left Queenstown Aug. 27 in the steamship Abbotsford, and after a stormy voyage arrived safely in Philadelphia Sept. 9. In a financial sense the trip was a failure, the Athletics' share of the loss being about $1,600. Otherwise the trip was highly satisfactory to all concerned in it, no unfortunate accident or incident having occurred to mar the pleasure of the tourists. The Quaker City representatives, however, returned from their European trip with a crippled nine, Fisler and Clapp being unable to play much during the remainder of the season. McGeary had to act as catcher, and this left them without a short-stop, so they finished third in the championship series, this result being largely due to the nine not being positioned properly at the out-set of the season and unavoidable accidents happening at its close. The treasurer's report at the annual meeting in December, 1874, showed that the receipts for the preceding five seasons amounted to the large sum of $127,106.

The campaign of 1875 was commenced with five of their old nine, viz., McBride, Clapp, Fisler, Anson, Sutton; and six new men in Eggler of the Philadelphias, Hall of the Bostons, Force of the Chicagos, and Richmond and Rocap, young amateurs. This made up a strong combination individually equal to any in the field, and one that ought to have made a better showing, especially as it was strengthened by the accession of Craver and Bechtel from the disbanded Centennials. Eggler, however, was unfortunately laid up by sickness, while Fisler and Clapp was crippled during the greater part of the season, these unavoidable misfortunes preventing the Athletics from presenting their full nine in more than eleven out of the seventy-seven championship games played by them during 1875. In addition to the players above-mentioned, Knight, the right-fielder of this year's nine, Coons, Gilroy and Al. Reach also took part in a few games during the latter part of the season. Notwithstanding the disadvantageous circumstances above-mentioned, the club ranked second only to the Bostons at the close of the championship season.

The Athletic Club having received a charter from the Legislature was changed into a stock company organization at a special meeting held Dec. 13, 1875, and it joined the newly-organized League in 1876, when the team for that season included Fisler, Sutton, Force, Hall, Eggler, Knight and Coons of the preceding season's corps, together with Zettlein, Malone and Meyerle, well-known professionals, and Fouser and Ritterson, amateurs. The Athletics were weakened this season by the want of a first-class pitcher and catcher to alternate with Knight and Coons in those positions, Zettlein and Malone not coming up to expectations. The unfortunate and unavoidable disabling of several of their players also cost many defeats, so that about the middle of September they decided to disband and not to make a second Western trip, the team at that time occupying the unenviable position of seventh or next to last in the race for the championship. The season had been a disastrous one financially, the much greater attraction of the Centennial Exposition absorbing the attention of the public in Philadelphia. Despite all these drawbacks, the Athletic Club would have struggled on and played everyone of its championship contests had it not in the Spring assumed and paid an old debt of some $5,600. This it did from the sense of honor that had always marked its transactions, believing that the debt should be paid, and not for a moment thinking that such action would at a later date subject the club to the disgrace of expulsion from the League at its annual meeting, nominally for a failure to keep its engagements, but virtually in order to allow Anson, Bradley and Battin to get their release from engagements entered into with the Athletics for the season of 1877.

From 1877 to 1879 inclusive, the club was kept up as a co-operative concern, being under different management each season, and including in its ranks the following players: Weaver, Caperoon, Ward, Lomas, Bennett, McGinley, Trott, Coons, McGlynn, McCartney, McClure, Sloan, Fields, Barber, Carroll, Pfeffer, Fisler, Meyerle, Reach, Myers, Say, Coons, Waitt, Ryan, Eggler, Sensenderfer, Baker, Hellings, Talmage, Phillips, Clark, Mason, Wiley, Deasley, Fusselbach, Benners, O'Brien, Kephart, Stricker, Shetzline, Fulmer, Shaw, Blackburn, Whiting, Birchall, Luff, Kimber, T. Reynolds, Berkiebach, Curry, McCartney, Slater, Walters, Connell and others. In 1878 and 1879 the Athletics played at Twenty-fourth and Ridge avenue, and during the three succeeding seasons their headquarters were at Oakdale Park, which, like four of their other grounds, having been sold for building purposes, they were again compelled to vacate and procure new headquarters for 1883. The managers in this emergency were fortunate enough to procure a portion of the ground used in 1864 and from 1871 to 1877 as above-mentioned.

The club was reorganized in 1880 under the management and direction of Wm. Sharsig and Charles Mason, the nine, which included O'Brien, one of the present catchers, being again run on the co-operative plan. Fulmer, who had organized the Philadelphia Club in 1880, decided the next season to unite his fortunes with the Athletics under Mason and Sharsig, and the two clubs combined their teams so as to present a representative nine in 1881. The team that year included Weaver and Driscoll, pitchers; O'Brien and Fusselbach, catchers; Householder, Fulmer and Battin on the bases; Stricker, short-stop; and Birchall, Gardner and Luff in the outfield. By hard and earnest work the Athletic management, which included Horace B. Phillips in the latter part of the season of 1881, slowly but solidly won their way into the good-will of the baseball-loving public of Philadelphia, and the result was a flattering financial success. In 1882 the American Association was organized, and the Athletic Club, under the management of Mason, Sharsig and Simmons, became one of its members, presenting the following team: O'Brien and Dorgan, catchers; Weaver, Sweeny and Mountain, pitchers; Geo. Latham, Stricker and Mann on the bases; Say, short-stop; and Birchall, T. Mansell and Blakiston in the outfield. The Athletics made a close fight for the championship, but finally finished a good second.

The official score-books show that the Athletics have played no fewer than fifteen hundred and odd games during the past twenty-four seasons, of which they have been credited with the remarkably large number of eleven hundred and odd victories, including a brilliant and almost uninterrupted series of triumphs from 1865 to 1871, inclusive. In these games they made such scores as 162, 131, 119, 118, 114 114, 107, 106, 104 101 and 101, while the highest score ever made against them was 51 by the Atlantics of Brooklyn. The first president of the Athletic Club was Wm. Ernst. He was succeeded by Col. Thomas Fitzgerald, who held that position from 1861 to 1865, inclusive. Col. D. W. C. Moore was president in 1866 and '67; James N. Kerns, 1869, '70, '71; E. Hicks Hayhurst, 1872, '73; James M. Ferguson, 1874; Charles Spering, 1875; Thomas J. Smith, 1876; Chas. H. Downing, 1877; Alfred H. Wright, 1878; Wm. W. Hincken, 1879; and Wm. Sharsig, 1880, '81, '82, '83. E. Hicks Hayhurst virtually acted as manager for thirteen successive seasons, his ability and tact in that position being then amply evidenced by the Athletic's pecuniary success. The roll of active and contributing members of the Athletic Club for seventeen successive seasons embraced the most prominent and influential residents of Philadelphia. The Athletic was about the original professional organization, and was one of the first to charge admission to its games. The record of the club during the past season, when they won the championship of the American Association, is fresh in the memory of our readers, and we therefore conclude by giving biographical sketches of the managers and players of the victorious team of 1883, the number attached to each name indicating the individual portrait with a corresponding number given on our first page.

14. CHARLES E. MASON was born June 25, 1853, in New Orleans, La., and his first experience in the national game was gained with amateur clubs of his native city. He has resided, however, in Philadelphia, Pa., for many years, and first found favorable notice while playing with the Americus Club of that city, as first-baseman and change-catcher during the season of 1874. The next year he was selected by the veteran manager Hicks Hayhurst as the right-fielder and change-catcher of the short-lived Centennial Club of the Quaker City, this being his first professional engagement. When the Centennials disbanded, in June, 1875, Mason joined the Washingtons of Washington, D. C., and played twenty games with that club on its Western tour, leaving them in Cincinnati, O., to accept an engagement for the remainder of the season with the Ludlows of that city as second-baseman and captain of their nine. In 1876 he was engaged by the Philadelphia Club as right-fielder, and when it disbanded went with a majority of the nine to Harrisburg, Pa., where he finished the season with the local professional club. We next find him with the Live Oaks of Lynn, Mass., with whom he played in the outfield and at first base during the season of 1877. Returning to Philadelphia, he played in 1878 with the Athletics of that city, filling the position of first-base with credit to himself and advantage to the club. In 1879 he was temporarily disabled on account of rheumatism after being engaged by the professional club of Davenport, Ia., and was able to play in but few of their games. In 1880 he was one of the managers and was chiefly instrumental in reorganizing the Athletics, and by commendable energy, enterprise and liberality in the direction of affairs restored baseball in the Quaker City to its former vigor and high reputation, and gained for himself and his coadjutors a flattering financial return during the next four seasons. He is the master-spirit of the Athletics by right of skill as well as experience. In all of his professional career he maintained the reputation of a hard-working and reliable player. Modest and unassuming, Mason as a manager has won hosts of friends, and is a general favorite with the fraternity.

15. WILLIAM SHARSIG, although comparatively young in years, has been prominently identified with the national game in Philadelphia for several seasons, and has ably discharged the onerous duties of president of the Athletic Club since its reorganization, in 1880. He was born twenty-eight years ago in Philadelphia, where he has figured favorably, both in an active and official capacity, with the leading local amateur organizations during the past decade, being right-field of the Eckford, Shibe and Defiance Clubs besides taking a prominent part in the management of each of said teams. His advent in the professional arena may be said to date back to 1880, when he helped, financially and otherwise, to reorganize the Athletic Club, and located it at Oakdale Park, of which he at that time held the lease, and where the representative nine of the Quaker City met with a very cordial reception during its three years' sojourn. When Oakdale Park was sold for building purposes and the Athletics were compelled to procure new headquarters, President Sharsig and his associate-managers secured the present grounds, at Twenty-sixth and Jefferson streets, which they have made one of the finest in the country. It may be said that his earnest exertions on behalf of baseball, together with his genial manners, earn him much popularity, not only with the local fraternity, but also with the many professionals visiting Philadelphia.

1. LEW SIMMONS was born Aug. 27, 1838, in New Castle, Pa., and has been identified for many years with baseball in Philadelphia. He commenced ball-playing at an early age, and often took a hand in a game of baseball when it did not interfere with the performance of his professional duties with minstrel troupes, being noted for his heavy batting. Shortly after he made Philadelphia his home he was elected a member of the Athletic Club, and formed one of its nine in many of the games played in 1866 and 1867. When Oakdale Park, Philadelphia, was formally opened to the public, July 30, 1866, with a game between the Athletic and Philadelphia Clubs, Lew Simmons led the batting-score on behalf of the former with one out and ten runs. He also took part with the Athletics in several games of baseball played on the ice during the Winter of 1866-67, being an expert skater. At a special meeting of the Athletic Club held April 26, 1867, he was presented by his fellow-members with a handsome gold-headed cane as a slight token of their appreciation of his efforts on behalf of Philadelphia's favorite ball-club. Lew also played in a few games with the Philadelphia Club in 1867, although still retaining his membership in the Athletics. He has ever since continued to take an active interest in the Athletics, being an enthusiastic friend of that organization, and his cheering cry of "Pretty work!" was well known to the attendants at all ball-games in Philadelphia. At the commencement of the season of 1882 Lew Simmons assumed the management of the team, in which he had the co-operation of Charles Mason and Wm. Sharsig. Lew Simmons and his associates have worked diligently, and the result was that the past two seasons were the most successful financially ever known in the annals of the club. At the last annual meeting of the American Association he was re-elected one of its board of directors.

5. ALONZO KNIGHT was born about twenty-eight years ago in Philadelphia, and was educated at Girard College of that city, and on its playground first practiced the national game. After graduating from that institution he pitched for the Shibe Club, the amateur champions of his native city, and also acted as pitcher, captain and manager of the White Stockings of Burlington, N. J., during the seasons of 1874 and 1875. The White Stockings under his captaincy earned many creditable victories, the most noteworthy being their defeat on Aug. 12, 1874, of the Haymakers of Philadelphia by 1 to 0, a score previously unequaled in the annals of baseball, the smallest score in a professional contest then being 2 to 0. Knight, however, first came prominently before the public on Sept. 4, 1875, when he made his debut in the professional arena as the pitcher of the Athletics of Philadelphia, who had the day previously been beaten by the Bostons by a score of 16 to 0. "The glorious uncertainty" of baseball was never, however, more strikingly exemplified than on this occasion, as the Athletics, with Knight substituted in the pitcher's position, easily won, two scratch hits in the first inning being all that were credited to the Bostons in the game. He continued with the Athletics during the remainder of that season and until their disbandment, in September, 1876, filling the pitcher's position in a majority of their championship contests. "Lon" Knight, during 1877 and 1878, was one of the Lowells of Lowell, Mass., a nine that in the former season won the championship of New England. While playing with the Lowells he made for himself an enviable reputation as an outfielder, and almost entirely relinquished the pitcher's position. At the commencement of the season of 1879 he joined the Worcester Club, remaining with that organization two seasons, captaining their nine and guarding right-field. He also captained professional teams that visited Cuba and New Orleans in the Winter of 1879-80. During the seasons of 1881 and 1882 Knight played right-field for the Detroit Club. He rejoined the Athletics this season, playing right-field and acting as manager, a position for which his intelligence and experience well adapt him. Knight at one time promised to be a phenomenal pitcher, possessing, as he did, wonderful speed; but he turned his attention to outfielding, where his record has been a remarkably successful one, his playing at all times being sure and reliable. As a batsman he ranks high, being a very hard and generally safe hitter. His honorable and straightforward conduct and his affable and courteous demeanor have deservedly won him a popularity surpassed by no other member of the professional fraternity.

12. HARRY D. STOVEY, who is now in his twenty-fifth year, is a native of Philadelphia, and first figured on the ball-field during the season of 1877 as the pitcher of the Defiance Club, the champion amateur organization of that city. Stovey also played a brief engagement that season at Williamsport, Pa., filling the positions of first base, pitcher and second base at various times with the local nine, which then included Ward, now the pitcher of the New York Club. He returned to Philadelphia in July, 1877, and signalized his reappearence with the Defiances by defeating the professional Philadelphias, with Ward as their pitcher, by a score of 3 to 0. The professionals were puzzled by Stovey's swift pitching, and made but two safe hits. The Defiances, flushed with their remarkable victory, met the Athletics on the following day, when an extraordinary struggle of fourteen innings resulted in a victory for the Athletics by a score of 3 to 2, only six safe hits being made by the winners off Stovey's pitching. Like Knight, Stovey first came prominently before the public as the pitcher of the Athletics. Knight's effective pitching helped the Athletics to defeat the Bostons; and it is a curious coincidence that Stovey's services were first called into requisition by the Athletics precisely two years afterwards, viz., Sept. 4, 1877, when his wonderful pitching assisted the local nine to a victory over the Chicagos by a score of 6 to 5. He helped the Athletics to a still more noteworthy victory on Sept. 19, 1877, in a contest with the St. Louis Browns, the co-operative home-team of four professionals and five young amateurs scoring six runs while their opponents failed to make a solitary one. Stovey's swift pitching puzzled the visitors, eight of them striking out and but two safe hits being made off him. He also pitched for the Athletics against the Chicagos on Sept. 24, 1877, when the latter club scored in the eleventh inning the solitary and winning run of one of the most remarkable games on record in Philadelphia. The Chicagos made but five single-basers off Stovey's pitching in the eleven innings, and the winning hit was a scratch. By the above instances it will readily be seen that Stovey possessed all the needed qualifications to excel as a pitcher, and he might have proved a phenomenal player in that position. Like Knight, however, he abandoned the pitcher's post after his first season and took to outfielding. F. C. Bancroft soon singled out Stovey and engaged him for the New Bedford Club, which the former managed in 1878, and Stovey's remarkably good outfielding amply justified his selection. He continued with the New Bedfords during 1879, heading their batting averages in championship contests and playing first base in fine form. When the New Bedfords disbanded Manager Bancroft at once secured him for the Worcester Club, and he continued from 1880 to 1882, inclusive, with that organization, doing excellent service in the outfield and at first base, besides leading both in batting and run-getting. His services were in active demand at the close of last season, but he preferred playing in his native city, and consequently accepted the liberal offer made him to captain and guard first base for the Athletic Club. In any position on the field he is a valuable man, and he has won for himself an enviable reputation as one of the best general players in the country. He is a very hard hitter and an exceedingly clever base-runner. The following are a few instances of his hard hitting: In a game between nines of New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., on Oct. 25, 1879, he made seven successive safe hits, including a home-run, a three-baser and three two-baggers. In the Worcester-Providence game Aug. 17, 1882, he made two home-runs and a three-bagger. This season he has made no fewer than twenty home-runs, including the longest hits ever chronicled on the grounds in St. Louis, Pittsburg and Philadelphia. He is a strictly temperate, honest and ambitious young man, and is in every respect a model professional player.

6. A. J. BIRCHALL was born about twenty-six years ago in Philadelphia. He played for several seasons with amateur clubs of Germantown, a suburban district of his native city, generally filling the position of second base. His professional career commenced in 1878, when he was engaged by the Hartford Club, which had but a brief existence. He was then secured by the Athletics, with whom he has remained up to the present time, with the exception of the season of 1880, when he guarded third base and afterwards left-field for the Baltimore Club until it was disbanded, and then joined the Globe, a semi-professional team of his native city. He has figured favorably in over five hundred games during the five seasons he has been connected with the Athletics. Birchall first filled the position of second base for the Athletics, but during the last three seasons he has guarded left-field for that club, making by his remarkable running-catches and splendid throwing an enviable reputation. We may mention as an instance of the many bits of fine fielding credited to Birchall one effected in the contest June 1, 1882, when the Cincinnatis were blanked. The Cincinnatis' nearest approach to scoring was in the ninth inning, when, with two out and men on third and second bases, Birchall made a wonderful one-handed jumping catch at left-field off Luff's terrific hit, which was seemingly sure to be a home-run. His other wonderful catches at critical points have also helped the Athletics to many a victory. He is an excellent batter, as is shown by the fact of his accomplishing in the Athletic-St. Louis game May 27, 1882, the difficult feat of making five successive safe hits, including two double-baggers. His chief point of excellence, however, is his clever base-running, in which respect he is considered one of the best in the professional ranks. As an instance of his skill as a base-runner, we cite the fact that he performed the phenomenal feat of making nine runs without even getting a solitary safe hit in four successive games against St. Louis in August, 1882. He is an honest, hard-working player, always working for the best interest of his club, and his genial disposition has endeared him alike to the players and patrons of the game in the Quaker City, where nearly all his ball-playing career has been passed.

11. J. STRICKER was born in Philadelphia, Pa., about twenty-four years ago. During his brief but brilliant career he has been connected with several local clubs, commencing in 1878, when he was the third-baseman and change-catcher of the leading amateur organization of the Quaker City, and also played with the Athletics as a substitute in a few games. During the next two seasons he was the short-stop of the co-operative teams known as the Philadelphia and the Globe. He was engaged by the Athletic Club in 1881, and has continued with that organization ever since. During the past two seasons he filled the position of second base, where he has but few equals and no superior. He is a sure catch, a swift and accurate thrower, and his activity enables him to cover a great extent of ground. He in 1882 displayed remarkable skill as a second-baseman, having but one error recorded to him in seventeen successive games. He accepted fourteen chances without an error this season. A wonderful left-handed jumping-catch of a liner and thirteen chances accepted without an error were also features of his base-play. Stricker, who ranks as an expert base-runner and as a good batsman, is also an earnest, effective and reliable player in almost any position.

2. JOHN O'BRIEN was born June 12, 1860, in Philadelphia. His ball-playing career commenced in 1878 as catcher of the Yeager Club, an amateur organization of the Quaker City. He caught for the Yeagers in their extraordinary contest with the Girard College nine June 29, 1878, it being next to the longest game on record in regard to the number of innings played. So evenly matched were the two teams that no fewer than twenty-one innings were necessary before the question of superiority was settled in favor of the Yeagers by a score of 10 to 7. O'Brien made two runs, besides accomplishing some brilliant work behind the bat. His fine play in this game led to his engagement by the Athletics, the representative professional team of his native city, and he proved to be the best of the ten different players that had been tried by the management in the catcher's position during the season of 1878. O'Brien caught for the California Club of San Francisco, Cal., in 1879, and materially helped that organization to win the championship of the Pacific Coast. He declined remaining more than one season in San Francisco although he was offered very flattering inducements. Returning to his native city in 1880, he rejoined the Athletics, with whom he has since been connected. He has caught for several pitchers during his brief professional career, giving each and all of them clever support, his work behind Mathews, Jones and Bradley this season being especially noteworthy. He is an earnest and hard-working young player, who has but few equals for pluck and coolness in his position. He has given substantial proof of his endurance and courage by playing either as catcher or in the outfield in a majority of the games played by the Athletics this season, although he has met with accidents sufficiently serious to disable some players from filling any position for months. O'Brien also ranks as a first-class outfielder. He has developed into a powerful batsman, being now one of the hardest hitters of the Athletic team. His gentlemanly deportment both on and off the ball-field has made him a general favorite in the Quaker City.

8. ROBERT BLAKISTON was born about twenty-five years ago, in San Francisco, Cal., and commenced his baseball career in 1878 as third-baseman of the California Club of that city. He filled the same position with the Californias during the succeeding season, when that club was strengthened by O'Brien, now of the Athletics. He commenced the season of 1880 as rightfielder of the Athletics of San Francisco, and after filling a brief engagement as short-stop with the Union Club of that city rejoined the Californias, taking McKinnon's place at first base. During 1881 he guarded second base for the Athletic Club of his native city. He came East in 1882 and soon secured an engagement with the Athletic Club of Philadelphia, Pa.—it being his first appearance as a professional. Blakiston took part in all but three of the seventy-five championship games played by the Athletics last season, and did that club excellent service both as third-baseman and right-fielder. In the former position his play at times was brilliant, some of his stops and pick-ups being extraordinary, but he occasionally lacked accuracy in throwing. He also displayed much skill as an outfielder, ranking first in the fielding averages of the seventeen players who guarded right-field in the American Association's championship contests last season. He proved himself during the present season to be a valuable substitute, having acceptably filled various positions both in the outfield and infield whenever any of the regular nine happened to be disabled.

4. ROBERT MATHEWS was born about thirty-one years ago in Baltimore, Md., and first figured on the ball-field in 1870 with the Marylands of his native city, although he first played professionally in 1871, when he pitched for the Kekionga Club of Fort Wayne, Ind., and his curved delivery proved puzzling to the best batsmen that season. In the opening championship game on May 4, 1871, when the Kekiongas defeated the Forest City Club of Cleveland by the then unprecedented score of 2 to 0, Mathews pitched with such telling effect that but five safe hits were made off him, and three of that number were credited to Jim White. He returned to Baltimore in 1872, when he pitched for the newly-organized professional club of that city, known as the Lord Baltimore. In 1873 he joined the Mutuals of this city, taking the place of Arthur Cummings, and it was while playing with the "Mutes" that "Bobby" Mathews first came into prominence as a pitcher. He remained with the Mutuals for four consecutive seasons, and much of the success that club then obtained may be attributed to his very effective pitching. Mathews officiated as pitcher for the Mutuals in two hundred and forty-three games, and his pluck and endurance in a long up-hill fight were amply demonstrated on more than one occasion, especially in the prolonged struggle with the Louisvilles in 1876, when fifteen innings were played one afternoon and sixteen on the following day before the question of victory was finally settled in favor of Mathews' men. He was engaged in 1877 by the Cincinnatis, who opened as a League club; but when they disbanded, about the middle of June, he united his fortunes with the Buckeyes of Columbus, O., and alternated as pitcher with McCormick, now of the Clevelands. In 1878 Mathews pitched for the Worcester (Mass.) Club, and on Aug. 15 of that year, in a game with the Bostons, he once more practically illustrated his skill in that position by blanking the then champions, who were able to make but two safe hits off him. In 1879 he was engaged by the Providence Club as its change-pitcher, and he took part in forty-two championship contests, officiating in his old position in nineteen of said games. In 1880 he was engaged by the Star Club of San Francisco, Cal., making his first appearance in that city May 2, when he succeeded in striking out twelve of his opponents. He remained with that club until it disbanded, and then returned East. At the commencement of the season of 1881 he was engaged by the Providence Club, but after playing a short time with that organization he was released, and at once joined the Bostons. He continued with the Boston Club in 1882, during which season more men struck out off him than off any other pitcher in the League, and he certainly never pitched better. Mathews was engaged by the Athletic Club this season, and pitched with wonderful success up to July last, but then unfortunately met with an accident which prevented him from playing in many important games, and hampered his team materially in the race for the championship. He was in fine form on May 29 last, retiring the Cincinnatis for only two safe hits, besides striking out nine men. Mathews was one of the first to introduce the curved delivery; and as he uses a good deal of headwork, his pitching has generally proved troublesome to even the best of batsmen. He is an earnest and faithful worker, a capital fielder in his position, and is favorably known both on and off the ball-field.

7. GEORGE W. BRADLEY was born about thirty-two years ago in Philadelphia, and commenced his career on the ball-field as third-baseman of an amateur club of that city. His professional career began in 1874, when he pitched for the Easton Club. He made a fine reputation in the pitcher's position during his first season, his most notable performances being against the Philadelphias and Athletics—each utterly failing to hit him. Bradley also pitched for the Athletics in a ten-inning game with the Bostons Oct. 29, 1874, in Worcester, Mass., and greatly distinguished himself on that occasion. He, however, first came into notice in the professional arena as the pitcher of the St. Louis Club in 1875, that organization auspiciously inaugurating its championship season by defeating the Chicagos 10 to 0. He remained two seasons in St. Louis, and the chief credit of most of the victories secured by the "Browns" undoubtedly belonged to Bradley's wonderfully effective pitching. He was engaged by the Chicago Club in 1877, and pitched in a majority of games of the then champion organization. Bradley pitched in 1878 for the New Bedford Club, which won the championship of New England. In 1879 he pitched for the newly-organized Troy Club, this being the last season that he regularly acted as pitcher. Bradley played third base for the Providence Club in 1880, occasionally alternating with Ward in the pitcher's position. At the commencement of the season of 1881 he was engaged by the Detroit Club as short-stop and change-pitcher, but, having a slight attack of pneumonia, he asked for his release and returned to Philadelphia. He soon recovered his health, however, and was secured as third-baseman and change-pitcher by the Clevelands. Only three hits were made off him in a twelve-inning game in 1882. He remained with the Clevelands up to the early part of this season, when he was released in order to accept an engagement as third-baseman and change-pitcher of the Athletics, it being the first year that he had ever played professionally in his native city. He proved to be a decided acquisition to the Athletics, and his effective pitching on more than one occasion materially helped that team to win the championship. He won the first of the concluding series of games with the St. Louis by a wonderful running-catch at centre-field, and he never pitched better than he did in the last game with that club, when the Athletics virtually won the championship. The St. Louis men were confident of their ability to bat Bradley all over the field, but he held them down to three scattering safe hits.

9. FREDERICK COREY was born twenty-six years ago in Providence, R. I., and first played baseball in 1874, when he filled the position of pitcher with the Dexter Club, an amateur organization of his native city. He remained as pitcher with the Dexters two seasons. He first played professionally in the latter part of the season of 1876 and in 1877 with the Rhode Islands—the champions of New England. The clever manner in which he pitched won for him an enviable name and reputation. Poor as was the support provided him, he twice defeated the Bostons in 1877 by the respective scores of 3 to 2 and 4 to 1, and forced the members of that nine to acknowledge that he was the most puzzling pitcher they encountered that season. When in 1878 a League club was organized in Providence, Corey was secured as one of its pitchers. He, however, only played in a few games with the Providences, and then finished the season with the New Bedfords, alternating with Bradley in the pitcher's position. Corey commenced the season of 1879 as pitcher of the Capital City Club of Albany, which was transferred early in May for advertising purposes to Rochester. He pitched and guarded second base for Rochester's professional club during the remainder of that season, accompanying it on its trip to California in October. Corey was engaged by the Worcester Club in 1880, and remained with that organization until its disbandment, at the close of last year, when he was engaged by the Athletics for the present year. He has shown that he is a decided acquisition to Philadelphia's representative nine, being an effective change-pitcher and able to cleverly fill almost any other position in the field, besides being a good batter and base-runner.

3. EDWARD ROWEN was born about twenty-six years ago in Bridgeport, Ct. He first played baseball in 1876, when he was connected as catcher with the T. B. F. U. S. Club—a well-known semi-professional organization of his native place. In 1877 he caught for the Fall River Club, which distinguished itself that season by winning fourteen-inning games with the Manchesters and Rhode Islands by the respective scores of 1 to 0 and 4 to 1, besides defeating the Bostons by 6 to 4. Rowen caught for the Manchester Club in 1878 and 1879. When the Manchesters disbanded, at the close of the season of 1879, Rowen joined the Rochester Club, and accompanied it on its long trip to San Francisco, Cal., remaining in that city and playing with the Bay City and Athletic Clubs as catcher and short-stop during 1880. He played with clubs in Nevada during 1881, and then accepted an engagement with the Boston Club for the following season, when he gained an extended reputation as the catcher for Bobby Mathews. The Athletic management engaged Mathews and Rowen for this season, during which the latter was singularly unfortunate in being injured while behind the bat, and consequently failed to take part in a good many championship games.

10. M. MOYNAHAN was born about twenty-four years ago in Chicago, Ill., and commenced playing ball in 1877 with an amateur club of his native city. His first professional engagement was with the representative club of Davenport, Ia., in 1878 and 1879. His exceedingly hard hitting earned for him the third place in the professional batting averages of 1878. Moynahan played short-stop for the Buffalo Club during a portion of the season of 1880, when he led that team in batting, and ranked fifth in that respect in the League averages. He commenced the season of 1881 with the Cleveland Club, and finished it with the Detroits. Last year he played short-stop for the Philadelphias until an injury to his hand sent him to the outfield, where he astonished everyone by his brilliant catches. Having entirely recovered from his injury, he was engaged by the Athletic Club for this season, during which he has done clever work in his home-position of short-stop, besides batting remarkably well, especially at critical points, and it may be noted here that his safe single sent home Stovey's run in the ten-inning game with the Eclipse Club Sept. 28, which virtually won the championship for the Athletics.

13. DANIEL A. JONES was born twenty-three years ago in Litchfield County, Ct. He has pitched for the Yale College nine during the last two seasons, his effective delivery enabling that team to win the college championship in 1882 and 1883. At the close of the college season last June Jones got offers from all over the country, and accepted one from the Detroit Club, making his professional debut July 9 in a game with the Providences. He was released for economical reasons by the Detroits, and his services were immediately secured by the Athletics, who were without a pitcher, to take the place of Mathews, who was in a crippled condition. "Jumping-jack" Jones—as he has been nicknamed, on account of his peculiar method of delivery—made his first appearance with the Athletics Sept. 4, when his effective pitching proved too much for the St. Louis, who made only four safe hits off him, and three of these were scratches. He three times pitched men out on strikes after six balls had been called on him, and, with better support behind the bat and fairer umpiring on balls and strikes, would have made even a better record. He played with the Athletics during the remainder of the season, taking part in seven championship games, five of which he helped materially to win, while the two defeats were chiefly owing to the miserable support behind the bat given by Rowen and Hubbard, the latter being the catcher of the Yale College nine. Jones occupied the pitcher's position Sept. 28, when the Athletics won the American Association championship by defeating the Eclipse Club after an exciting and closely-contested game of ten innings. He proved a terror to the hard-hitters of the home-team, and the best they could do with him was a total of eight safe hits in ten innings. While with the Yale College nine he twice accomplished the feat of retiring a college team in nine successive innings for a solitary safe hit, and during his very brief professional career he has made a remarkable record, and to-day is the best-known pitcher in the country.

BROOKLYN vs. AMATEURS.

The Brooklyn Club made its last appearance on the diamond this season Oct. 5, on which occasion the team were the recipients of a well-merited complimentary benefit given them by the clubs of the Long Island Association as a testimonial of thanks to President Byrne for courtesies extended by him to the amateurs this season. The six clubs of the Long Island Amateur Association were represented by Messrs. Cartwright and Manning of the Commercials, Buckley of the Putnams, Brush and McGlone of the Bedfords, Burns and Clare of the Stars, Bunce of the Dauntless and Sylvester of the Monroes. The game was closely contested up to the seventh inning, when the professionals got in four runs and took the lead, it then being too dark to play the eighth inning. The score:

THE CHAMPIONSHIP AVERAGES OF 1883.

The championship season of the American Association and League ended Oct. 1, and we herewith present a tabular statement—expressly compiled for THE CLIPPER—of the doings with bat and ball of the two hundred and eight players of these two leading professional associations who took part in five or more games. Upon a perusal of the following figures our readers will be able to form their own opinions with regard to the batting and fielding abilities of any particular player, and therefore but little comment is required in the way of introduction. Thos. Mansell and Brouthers lead in their respective associations in batting, while Reilly and Start excel in fielding. T. Mansell, although given the highest rank in the American Association batting averages, occupies the sixty-ninth place in the League averages, these curiously-contrasting figures showing either a wonderful improvement in batting or faulty scoring.

THE LONG ISLAND AMATEUR ASSOCIATION.

A special meeting of this Association was held Oct. 3 in Brooklyn, N. Y., to take action upon the award of the championship pennant for 1883, and to hold a discussion on revising the rules and regulations, etc., preliminary to the annual meeting in December. Delegates from all but the Monroe Club were present. The championship was awarded to the Commercial Club on the basis of the following official record:

	Commercial	Putnam	Bedford	Star	Dauntless	Monroe	Won.	Played.	Pc.
Commercial	..	1	3	2	3	3	12	15	0
Putnam	2	..	1	1	3	3	10	15	0
Bedford	0	2	..	3	2	3	10	16	1
Star	1	2	0	..	2	3	8	16	1
Dauntless	0	0	1	1	..	3	5	16	1
Monroe	0	0	0	0	0	..	0	16	1
Games lost	3	5	5	7	10	15	45

Resolutions were adopted complimentary to the Prospect Park Commissioners, and especially to Chief-engineer John Y. Culyer for the facilities for playing their games accorded the Association clubs. Arrangements were also made for a testimonial to Charley Hunt, the Superintendent of the Park ball-fields. A special committee was appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws, to report at the annual meeting in December. A committee, too, was appointed to confer with Mr. Culyer on the subject of the Association's being allowed to improve the three fields—Nos. 1, 2 and 3—for the use of the Association clubs, just as the cricket clubs are allowed to prepare their field for cricket. A resolution of thanks to President Chas. H. Byrne of the Brooklyn Baseball Association was adopted for courtesies extended by him to the amateurs. The meeting then adjourned to December.

BOSTON GOSSIP.

The benefit of the Bostons on Wednesday, Oct. 3, was an auspicious occasion and an auspicious conclusion of their work in the city this season. The attendance was not far from 6,000, filling every seat, and coming not only from this city, but from Hyde Park, Fall River, Lynn, Lowell and other places in the vicinity. To give interest to the occasion, Galvin and White were the "battery" for the Bostons, while Buffinton and Hackett appeared for the Buffalos in the first four innings and Whitney and Hines in the last five. The Bostons were utterly nonplused by their own pitchers, much to the amusement of the spectators, making but one hit off Buffinton—the veriest scratch inside of the diamond—and but two off Whitney. Hines was greeted warmly, it being his first appearance since his fingers were so severely banged. Whitney pitched swifter than ever, and Hines' plucky work occasioned much wonder. Galvin was as tricky as ever, but his own comrades found him with little difficulty, and the result was a victory for the Buffalo side, 10 to 1. Radford pitched in the seventh inning for the Bostons, and in response to demands of the crowd Morrill pitched in the eighth and ninth, and showed excellent capabilities for the position. Interesting features of the game were the presentation to Whitney on his first turn at the bat of a magnificent gold Waltham watch, chain and charm. On its face is finely engraved a pitcher, on its back is a batsman. On the inside case is engraved: "James E. Whitney, from Boston friends, Oct. 3, 1883." Time was next called on Hackett in the same inning, when an elegant bouquet was bestowed upon that faithful young player. In the third inning Paul Radford was handed a beautiful Howard gold watch, chain and charm inscribed as follows: "Presented to Paul Radford of the B. B. B. Club by his Hyde Park and Boston friends, 1883." The score-cards of the game contained a neat albertype group of the nine, but were not nearly so elegant as the donors, Rand, Avery & Co., had given reason to expect. The championship record of the League clubs was not printed at all. The exact receipts will not be known until the nine returns from its Southern trip, but are expected to reach at least $250 for each player. After the game the players were called into the dressing-room and were addressed by President Soden, who congratulated them upon winning the championship. On behalf of the directors he thanked each and every one for his efforts to bring the pennant to Boston, for the harmonious relations which had existed between the players themselves and between the players and the management, and for the good conduct of the men on and off the field. He hoped every one would be in the team of 1884, and concluded by presenting each player in the name of the directors with an envelope containing a check for $100. The players responded with three rousing cheers for the directors. The Bostons play the Athletics Oct. 18, 19, 20, having changed the dates previously arranged. Joe Hornung presented Charley Harris, the score-card seller, with a silver watch on the benefit day.....President Soden has been in the constant receipt of congratulatory telegrams. One arrived on Monday, Oct. 1, signed by John M. Kearns, Joe Daniels and one hundred other Leadville Bostonians.....Morrill of the Bostons is the second heaviest batter in the League.....The Bostons and Buffalos witnessed the performance of "Jalma" at the Boston Theatre Monday evening, Oct. 1, and were each the recipient of hearty cheers. On Tuesday, by invitation, they occupied balcony-boxes at the Globe, the performance being "Monte Cristo." The Bostons are not at all sorry that the Providences refused to play for their benefit, for the Buffalos were in every way satisfactory. The Bisons enjoyed themselves immensely, and their gentlemanly behavior won for them hosts of friends in this city.....George Wright says that he will not have anything to do with any nine to be formed in Boston for 1884.....Gunning of the Springfield (O.) Club is playing with the Bostons, and is said to be one of the finest catchers in the Northwestern League. He is 22 years old, 5ft. 10in. high and weighs about 160lb. He formerly played with the Fall Rivers, catching Buffinton.....Smith has been released by the Bostons, and will return to his former position in Holyoke.....An excellent idea has been suggested by one of the nine to the effect that the directors present each player with an appropriate medal, commemorative of the winning of the championship. The cost would not be very much, and its value, intrinsically, would be far greater than what it would be actually worth.....Annis, a Massachusetts boy, formerly of the General Worths of Stoneham, but this season with the Anthracites of Pottsville, made his first appearance with the Bostons Monday, Oct. 1, and made an excellent impression, making several fine fly catches and throwing well.....The Bostons need a fielder who is first-class in every respect—catching, throwing and batting. The experiment of beginning a season with such an outfield as they did this is ridiculous. An experimental nine will not win the championship in '84.....The married members of the team are Hornung, Burdock, Morrill, Sutton and Whitney..... Whitney began to play ball immediately after leaving school; Hines has no regular trade; Morrill is a wood-carver; Burdock began business as a butcher's boy; Sutton is a miller; Wise worked in a sower-and-reaper manufactory before playing ball; Hornung has no trade; Buffinton was a clerk in a commission house; Hackett is a printer; Radford played ball immediately after leaving school; and Smith is a clerk in the Winona Paper-mills of Holyoke.....Coolidge, the well-known Harvard second-base man, will not play on the college team in 1884. He is studying law in this city. He has received many offers to play professionally. The Bostons and St. Louis wanted him this season.

MISCELLANEOUS.

IN A SPECIAL NOTICE on another page we state that THE CLIPPER will NOT be sold, as previously advertised in some of the daily newspapers.

THE NEW ATTRACTIONS at the Dime Museum, Washington, D. C., Oct. 8, were Major Tot, Sanders and Dean, Morton and Monroe, and J. M. Turner. Last Sunday afternoon Prof. Geo. Poole, a magician engaged at the museum, was badly bitten in the hands, knee and other parts of the body by a monkey that had escaped from its cage. In endeavoring to recapture the animal it flew at Poole in a savage manner, knocked him down and hit him a number of times. The man was removed to a neighboring drug-store, where he had his wounds dressed by a surgeon who had been summoned. Later in the day, finding that his monkeyship could not be captured without other serious damage, it was shot and killed by one of the attaches of the museum.

THE BUILDINGS of the Pittsburg Exposition Society were totally destroyed by fire on the morning of Oct. 3, together with the contents. Nothing was saved except a couple of wagons and such valuables as were locked up in the safes, among which was Levy's gold cornet. The estimated loss on buildings and contents is $1,000,000. There was $40,000 insurance on buildings, but the exhibitors had comparatively little insurance. The cause of the fire has not been ascertained. It was thought at first that it originated from Prof. Warner's balloon, which had been hung in the boiler-room to dry; but that theory has been exploded, and it is now pretty generally conceded to have been of incendiary origin. There was an exhibition of fireworks on the grounds on the evening of the 6th, and Levy played the cornet that had passed through the conflagration, standing upon the safe that had held it.

HARRIS' MUSEUM, Pittsburg, Pa., did the usual good business during the past week. The entire company left Oct. 6. Sharpley, the Ellsworth Zouave Children, the Hollywoods, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Nash, Mlle. Loretta and birds, and Logrenia.

G. B. BUNNELL'S Dime Museum and Nickel Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., was opened to the public Oct. 8. The principal attraction was the Baby Venus.

J. W. HOLMES' STANDARD MUSEUM, Brooklyn, L. I., still competes successfully for public favor. The leading attraction for the week of Oct. 8 is H. M. Parker and his performing dogs.

DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION.

HENRY B. NORMAN, first old-man with Modjeska's company, died very suddenly at his boarding-house, 911 Walnut street, Philadelphia, early on the morning of Oct. 4. He had seemed in perfect health the night before, and had played Mons. Duval in "Camille" at the Chestnut-street Opera-house with all his wonted ability. After the performance he retired, but was unable to sleep, and complained to his wife, who was also playing with Modjeska, that he was suffering from indigestion. Vomiting set in, and a physician was immediately summoned, but as he entered the room Mr. Norman suddenly expired. A post-mortem examination revealed the fact that he died of heart-disease, and a coroner's jury rendered a verdict to that effect. Deceased's real name was Henry Norman Bressee, and he was born at Lockport, N. Y., fifty-five years ago. Of his first appearance on any stage no accurate record can be found, but he had been in the profession about twenty years. For the past three seasons he had been a member of Mary Anderson's company. His funeral took place from the house where he died, the Rector of St. Stephen's Church officiating, and his remains were taken to his home in Lockport for interment.

MISS ORRIDGE died of typhoid-fever in Guernsey, Eng., Sept. 16. She was a popular vocalist, and had accompanied Sims Reeves on his tours and sung at the principal musical festivals.

WILLIAM DOWTON died in the Charter House, of which he had been a "brother" for the last thirty-seven years, London, Eng., Sept. 19, close on to ninety years of age. He was the eldest son of the famous Dowton, and for many years manager of the Kent circuit.

TONY BENTON, who died in Sacramento, Cal., was buried in the Catholic Cemetery Sept. 23, his funeral having been attended by the performers of both variety theatres there. He was an Irish comedian, and had resided for twenty-five years past in San Francisco, playing in the minor theatres.

ARTHUR SCARVELL died in Brighton, Eng., Sept. 7, aged 26 years. He was a popular actor, and for some time a member of the stock company at the Theatre Royal there. He left a wife (a professional) and one child.

R. L. STOCKHOUSE died in San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 4, as announced in our "Latest News by Telegraph." He was the stage-machinist of the California Theatre.

AMY NELSON died in Silver City, N. M., Sept. 12. Her real name was Amelia Platt, and she was a daughter of H. B. Platt, the builder of Platt's Hall, San Francisco, Cal. When quite young she became infatuated with the stage and played children's characters in that city for a season. An unhappy marriage and separation followed, and, being possessed of a fine voice and good musical education, she became a vocalist. For nearly three years prior to her death she had been a professional vocalist either in El Paso or in Silver City.

ATHLETIC.

IN A SPECIAL NOTICE on another page we state that THE CLIPPER will not be sold, as previously advertised, in some of the daily newspapers.

EDWARDS TO VAUGHAN.

That the victories of William Edwards, the Antipodean long-distance walker, over Daniel O'Leary have increased his confidence in his powers, is attested by the following, which reached us Oct. 8:

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Sept. 8, 1883.

EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: William Edwards, long-distance champion of Australia, begs to inform H. Vaughan of New York, late of Chester, Eng., that he accepts the challenge issued in The Sporting Life of July 11 last, and will walk him for £500 a side at a time and place hereinafter to be agreed upon. Having resided the best part of my life in the semi-tropical climate of sunny Australia, I do not propose braving the rigors of an American Winter, but intend being in San Francisco, Cal., about Christmas next, and will journey on to New York at the latter end of March or beginning of April, if agreeable to Mr. Vaughan. I will remit from San Francisco a deposit of $500 to bind a match; or, failing him, anyone else can be accommodated for a like sum. If favorable, Madison-square Garden, New York, would be preferred. If not procurable, the most suitable building in New York to be selected. Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM EDWARDS.

THE CANADIAN CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Our Montreal correspondent's report of the annual athletic meeting for the decision of the amateur championships of Canada, held Oct. 6, having failed to reach us in time for this issue, we are obliged to make use of the following telegraphic account, which is necessarily incomplete:

The weather was lovely for the time of year, and there was a large attendance, the immense pavilion being crowded with the elite of the city. The visiting athletes from New York carried off the lion's share of the spoils, while to Thompson of Montreal belongs the credit of winning three events, one of which, the 100-yards sprint, was timed in 9⅞s.; but, as is well known, there is a fall in the course in favor of the runner. The three-mile walk was won by Frank P. Murray, Williamsburg A. C., in 22m. 12s., beating W. H. Meek, New York, by two minutes and four seconds. C. A. J. Queckberner, New York, threw the fifty-six pound weight 24ft. 11½in., and defeated F. L. Lambrecht, Manhattan A. C., and H. Wood, Montreal. The pole-leaping was won by H. H. Baxter, New York A. C., at 9ft. 11in., defeating James Elliott by an inch, and others. In the 100-yard race W. R. Thompson, Montreal A. A., finished in front of J. B. White, Manhattan A. C., M. W. Ford, New York A. C., and others. The time was announced as 9⅞ seconds. C. W. Martin, Ottawa Football Club, won the mile race in 4m. 45s. In throwing the hammer Queckberner again beat Lambrecht with a throw of 97ft. 5½in., which is a remarkably fine performance, the previous record having been 93ft. 11in. L. E. Myers, Manhattan A. C., won the quarter-mile race in 58 seconds, and the 220-yard race in 24 seconds. W. G. Ross of Montreal won both bicycle races, the mile in 3m. 30s., and the five-mile by a walk-over in 18m. 30s. M. W. Ford, New York A. C., won the running high-jump at 5ft. 4½in., but was defeated by eight inches in the running wide-jump by Thompson, who cleared 20ft. 10¾in. The half mile race was secured by Thomas Moffatt, Montreal, in 2m. 7½s. Queckberner won his third championship medal by putting the 16lb-shot 41ft. 10¾in., thereby defeating Lambrecht and Wood. Thomas F. Delaney, Williamsburg Athletic Club, won the two-mile race in 10m. 3s., and W. R. Thompson, M. A. A., easily won the 120-yard hurdle-race. In the evening the visiting athletes were dined by the Montreal Athletic Club at the Windsor Hotel.

PRINCE vs. JAMES.

We hold a check for fifty dollars on account of the subjoined challenge:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6, 1883.

EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: After the race at Springfield in which I beat Robert James, John Keen and H. W. Higham, James challenged me through a Springfield paper to race ten miles for $250 a side, and I accepted his challenge through the same paper. Then he went to Boston and challenged me again through a Boston paper, which I did not see till lately. Again he challenged me through The Bicycling World, and at last I came to the conclusion that he did not want to race me at all on a track, but wanted "a go" on paper. Now, to put a stop to all such talk, inclosed please find $50 for my first deposit, and I will race James for $250 a side and the championship of America; the editor of THE CLIPPER to hold the stakes. As I understand that James is going to stay in Washington some time, we can meet at any suitable place and draw up articles to forward to THE CLIPPER, accompanied by $200 each, which will make the stakes $250 a side. The race to take place on any fair track in America, Washington preferred; the winner to take the whole of the money. The race to be run under the auspices of some bicycle club or any responsible party, and within three weeks of signing articles. Hoping this will suit James, and that he will kindly give his attention to final arrangements, as I mean business only, I am yours, JOHN S. PRINCE, Champion Bicyclist of America.

DAWSON'S HANDICAP.

The fourteenth All-United States 135-yards pedestrian handicap, gotten up by James Dawson, was run at Echo Park, in Philadelphia, Oct. 6, 8. Forty runners took part in the thirteen trial heats on the first day, when the attendance of spectators was good. On the closing day in the neighborhood of one thousand people were on the grounds. The second trials and the final heat resulted as follow:

First heat—John Thomas, Newark, N. J., 23yds., first; J. Fox, Fairmount, 23½, second; G. Benkins, Frankford, 26, third; W. Irvine, Philadelphia, 25½, fourth. Won by three inches, six dividing the others. Time, 12⅛s.

Second heat—H. Latch, North Providence, 22, first; C. Colford, Philadelphia, 18½, second; J. H. Meehan, Fairmount, 22½, third. Won easily. Time, 12⅛s.

Third heat—J. Murphy, Natick, 17½, first; W. Garwood, Philadelphia, 24½, second; W. Mullen, Baltimore, 19, third. Won easily. Time, 12⅛s.

Fourth heat—G. Miller, Philadelphia, 20½, first; W. Eisenhower, Philadelphia, 18, second; R. Holt, Philadelphia, 18, third. Won by eighteen inches. Time, 12⅛s.

Final heat—Murphy, first, Miller second, Latch third, Thomas fourth. Won easily; a foot between second and third. Time, 12s.

HARRISON VS. PRICE.—The one-hundred-and-twenty-yards foot-race between Patrick Harrison of Coledale and Charles Price of Stockton, Pa., was decided at Mahanoy City Park on Saturday, Oct. 6. The stakes were $600. Both men were on the ground promptly at three o'clock. It rained hard all day, making the track very heavy. The start was by mutual consent, and they soon got away from their marks, Harrison stumbling, which gave his opponent nearly two yards the best of the start; but he very soon collared Price, taking the lead at about half-distance, when he came away and won a fine race easily by two feet. Quite a large sum of money changed hands on the result at evens. James Smith was referee. Jack Goulding trained the winner at the Polo Grounds in this city, while Price did his work under Pat Cannon.

QUOITING.—The quoit match between the Excelsior Club of this city and the Waverlys of Jersey City, a dozen men on each side, was played at the Ogden Farm, High Bridge, Oct. 8, resulting in the success of the Jerseymen. Score: Waverly—A. McGregor, 41; Jacob Ludlow, 39; W. Thornton, 41; James Stevens, 27; W. Smack, 39; J. R. Smith, 36; Charles Cowper, 25; James Low, 41; A. McLaren, 41; J. McLaren, 41; John Ludlow, 17; J. M. Stevens, 17; total, 405. Excelsior—S. McConchie, 21; George Grieve, 41; A. Maxwell, 31, H. Henderson, 41; A. A. Cock, 41; James Kellock, 41; W. Kellock, 41; A. McGregor, 22; J. Templeton, 3; David Foulis, 22; Robert Currie, 41; G. Henderson, 41; total, 386.

GOULDING AND BADGER.—The Polo Grounds have been secured for the entertainment to be given by Jack Goulding and Alf. Badger, and it will come off on Monday, Oct. 22. The programme is as follows: 75-yards handicap-run, one-mile handicap-run, two-mile handicap-walk, 125-yards hurdle-race, over six hurdles, together with boxing by amateurs only (for points), wrestling, bicycling, etc. Gold and silver medals are offered as prizes. All entries are free, and can be sent to Goulding at the Polo Grounds or to Badger at the Manhattan A. C. Grounds. L. E. Myers will also attempt to run one mile in four minutes, at four starts, and John Keen will probably ride one mile on a bicycle against a trotter.

THE WHEEL IN CHICAGO.—The Wanderers' Bicycle Club of Chicago held road-races on Sept. 29, with the result here shown: Three miles, for riders who had never beaten 3m. 45s. for one mile—Edward Mannen first, in 15m. 39s.; Nicholas Longworth Jr. second, in 15m. 42s.; Sherman Gear 0, Fred Shattuc 0, N. Isbell 0. Soon after starting they had an exhilarating ride down a pretty steep hill, and the homestretch was a stiff grade, calling for hard work. First-class race, three miles—Warner Galway first, in 15m. 12s.; J. K. Scudder 0, W. H. Wetmore 0.

THE CHICAGO BICYCLE-RACE.—Manager S. A. Miles informs us, under date of Oct. 3, that the entries up to that time for the six-days race to take place at Greiner's Madison-square Garden, Chicago, Ill., are H. W. Higham, J. S. Prince, W. J. Morgan, W. M. Woodside, Wm. Oliver, Richard Dowse (of Lincoln, Eng.) and C. J. Young. Woodside intends to compete in spite of his broken arm, while Higham and Prince state positively that they will start.

HOLSKE VS. FIELDERS.—Articles of agreement for a three-mile walk between E. C. Holske and T. B. Fielders were signed at Pottsville, Pa., Oct. 4. The match is for a gold badge and $300 a side, Holske conceding his opponent 550 yards start. County-commissioner A. J. Shortall is stakeholder. The match is to be decided at Pottsville on the evening of Oct. 17.

"MIDLOTHIAN ARMS."—The formal opening of this establishment, located at 466 Eighth avenue, above Thirty-third street, will take place on Thursday evening, Oct. 11, and the proprietor, George D. Noremac, the plucky long-distance pedestrian, will be pleased to see his friends at the house-warming—bar none.

THE CALUMET LACROSSE CLUB of Chicago, who won the championship from the Louisvilles, played the St. Louis Club on the Lake Park, Chicago Ball Grounds, for the championship on Oct. 6, the Calumets winning in three straight games.

Entries for the foot handicap (fee $2, acceptance $1) close NOV. 12; and for the canine competition (fee $1, no acceptance) Nov. 19. Entries can be made to A. Chambers, 922 Ridge avenue, and the usual other places. Referee and handicapper, H. Booth. Starter, A. Chambers.

COX VS. BELL.—There will be a ten-mile foot-race at the Canton, O., Fair Grounds on Saturday, Oct. 13, for a purse of $200, between Thomas Cox of Massillon and Wm. Bell of Cleveland; also a hundred-yards, quarter-mile and half-mile races, free-for-all. For further information address Wm. Flemming, P. O. Box 44, Massillon, O.

ISLAND PARK RACES.

The Fall meeting at Island Park, near Albany, N. Y., commenced Oct. 1, under favorable auspices, but the weather caused the races fixed for next day to go over, and during the remainder of the meeting the conditions were fairly good. Results: Class 2:34, purse $1,000—Pilot Knox first, Ossian Pet (won first heat) second, George R. third, and Little Mack fourth. Time, 2:29¼, 2:28¼, 2:27¼, 2:27¼. The weather conditions were unfavorable. Oct. 5: Class 2:17, for pacers—Jim Jewell first, Eddie D. (won fourth heat and ran a dead heat with Jewell for first), Billy S. (won second and third heats) fell on the track in the fifth heat and was distanced. Time, 2:24, 2:25¼, 2:25¼, 2:23¾, 2:23¾, 2:24, 2:23. TROTTING-HORSE BREEDERS' MEETING.

The seventh annual meeting of the National Association of Trotting-horse Breeders opened at Charter-oak Park, Hartford, Ct., Oct. 3. Results: The Union Stakes, $375, for foals of 1879 by stallions whose get had never beaten 2:40 at four years old—C. Stanford's Victor Clay first, New (won third heat) second, Volmer third. Time, 2:33, 2:31¼, 2:31, 2:30¾. The National Stallion Stakes, $1,345, foals of 1880—C. Backman's b. c. by Messenger Duroc first, in 2:42½, the only other starter, West Brefney, being distanced in the first heat. In the Mali Stakes, $2,500, foals of 1880, the Palo Alto Stock Farm's Hinda Rose beat the best three-year-old record of 2:21, making the mile without a skip in 2:20. For the Sequel Stakes of $100, for mares that have never beaten 2:40, H. C. Woodnutt's Smuggler's Daughter had a walk-over, making the mile in 2:29¾. There being only one nomination for the Standard Stakes, $200, the Marshlands Stock Farm's Troublesome was given the purse and excused from trotting. The Pacific Stakes, $200—Governor Stanford's Bonita walked over. The Hopewell Stakes, $600, for stallions that had never beaten 2:40—H. C. Woodnutt's Challenge first, in 2:38, 2:36, 2:36; Daniel O'Rorke second and Knox third. The Everett House Stakes, $475, foals of 1880—J. O'Rorke's West Brefney first, in 2:44½; Lassie distanced in the first heat. The Nursery Stakes, $850, for three-year-olds—C. Backman's b. c. by Messenger Duroc first, in 2:46¼, 2:43¼; Clem second, Minnie P. distanced in the third heat.

THE COUNTRY CLUB.—Much interest is taken in the meeting of this club to be held at Mystic Park, Boston, Mass., Oct. 17, 18, the rich purses offered having attracted the attention of horse-owners throughout the country. The stewards have engaged the hills and fields adjacent for the steeplechases, and a section of the fence at the park will be taken down. A full view of the run is had from the grand-stand, and the start, finish and water-jump are all directly in front of the same. Jacob Pincus is to officiate as starter, and the judges will be J. G. K. Lawrence, E. B. Haven and J. H. Bradford.

THE CESAREWITCH.—The event of the Newmarket (Eng.) second October meeting, the Cesarewitch Stakes, was decided Oct. 9, and resulted in the victory of G. Lambert's Don Juan, with Hackness second and Cosmos third. Twenty-two started, and Don Juan won easily by a length. Hackness was the favorite at 4 to 1 against, 5 to 1 being offered against Don Juan and Quicklime and 20 to 1 against Cosmos. Special interest was felt in the result because of the participation of the American mare Girofle, the odds against whom were 16 to 1. A vast amount of American money had been placed on her by her owner, F. T. Walton, and other admirers.

CRICKET.

A TEAM FOR ENGLAND.

At last the Philadelphia Cricket Association has determined to send a team of American amateur cricketers to England, something deferred unnecessarily long. For an American team to tour England as the Australians did would be worse than useless; but it has for the past two years been possible to send a representative American amateur team across the Atlantic to play in matches against the regular amateur players of England; of course, barring any but legitimate club elevens, and not allowing professional aid. Such a visit has been finally fixed upon, and through the liberality and public cricketing spirit of such patrons of American cricket as Messrs. Thos. McKean, Jas. M. Fox, Edward Davis and Lindsley Haines a guarantee-fund of $10,000 has been raised to defray the incidental expenses. Mr. Fox of the Merion Club is now in England making the necessary arrangements for a series of matches. He will attend the meeting of the county secretaries in December, and the list of fixtures will be arranged to permit matches with the Philadelphians. They will play against amateurs only, and in all county matches professionals will be barred. The gate-money receipts will be primarily devoted to the refunding of the guarantee to the subscribers, and should there be a balance left it will be given to the Cricket Association of the United States. The following players have already been asked to join the team: Messrs. D. S. Newhall, C. A. Newhall, R. S. Newhall, F. E. Brewster, E. W. Clarke Jr., William Brockie, J. A. Scott, D. P. Stoever, S. Law, J. B. Thayer Jr., and W. C. Lowry. We feel sanguine that just such a team as this will do themselves credit in every respect, and it is among the probabilities that they will win a large majority of their matches, and if they do it will be a great thing for American cricket beyond a doubt.

UNITED STATES vs. PHILADELPHIA.

The important game between a team composed of twelve professional and amateur players representing the United States, and twelve amateurs selected from the clubs of Philadelphia, Pa., was played Oct. 4, 5, 6 on the international grounds of the Germantown Club in that city, where so many great games have been played within the last quarter of a century. The event was looked upon as, in a measure, testing the supremacy of the Philadelphia players in contending with the strength of all other cricketing centres in the country. The game was played for the benefit of the Cricketers' Association, a committee of which had, after much deliberation, chosen the members of each team with a due regard to strengthening the side. A close contest was anticipated, but the result proved that the plucky Philadelphians had met with more than their match, at least on this occasion, the United States team securing an easy victory with eight wickets to spare. The victory of the visitors was mainly due to the excellent batting of Ogden and Bottomore, and to the very effective bowling of Lane in the second inning. Wister, Thayer, Stoever and C. Newhall were the chief contributors to the home team's totals. The full score below given will present all further particulars:

A supplementary contest to fill out the last day was immediately begun, Captain Newhall, who won the toss, sending the United States team to the bat. The rain which had been threatening for some time soon fell heavily, and the contest had finally to be abandoned shortly after 3 P. M. The feature of the incompleted inning was the brilliant batting of George Wright and Lane in their respective contributions of 52 and 20, these two carrying out their bats after having almost doubled the score while at the wickets. BILLIARDS.

CHALLENGE FROM RUDOLPHE.

With his accustomed unexpectedness, Rudolphe has turned up in Paris. When we last had word from him he was in China, intending to come back here by way of San Francisco about the close of this year. That was last Spring. Last Wednesday we were agreeably surprised to find him snugly ensconsed at the Grand Hotel, Paris, whence he issued the following defiance to all America:

PARIS, Oct. 3, 1883.

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER: Challenge anybody in America to play me for five thousand francs. Balkline game. Play in Paris. Money up. RUDOLPHE, Grand Hotel.

THE SEXTON-SLOSSON MATCH.

Sexton was to have left this city on the night of Oct. 8 for Chicago. During his sojourn of ten days in this city he has practiced but little. What he has done at the billiard-table has been generally well done, however, and his admirers regard him as "the coming man." Slosson is to leave this city this morning—Oct. 10—in the nine-o'clock fast express. Since he has been back from the West he has played about eight practice-games in all, ranging from 200 points to 500. His execution has been quite satisfactory to the bulk of his friends, although some of them have expressed themselves disappointed. No one has been more disappointed than Slosson himself. His well-known dislike of cushion-caroms has not abated a jot; and even on Sunday last, when an inspiration came to him and he was playing the game with more general strength than we have ever seen it played by anyone else, he paused in the midst of a run of 39 to hurl anathemas at this style of billiards. "It is the double-distilled essence of stupidity," he remarked; "and any man who follows billiards for a livelihood and plays the game for choice ought to be given prison for a year on bread-and-water. It is an abortion, with not a solitary redeeming feature—nothing to attract or encourage a man after he has played it for twenty minutes." Asked what he would do in case he should be fortunate enough to win the championship, he replied that he would resign it.

Both Sexton and Slosson will practice in Chicago on the same table, probably. It is likely that it will be assigned to each during certain fixed hours of the day. It is not likely that either will know how the other is doing, and it is less likely that the public will know aught of the play of either, save as their adherents let it leak out. The time to find out how each can play cushion-caroms will be on the night of Oct. 24 in Central Music Hall. Smoking should be strictly prohibited in the hall. If ever Slosson begins to "kick" about cushion-caroms the air will be so combustible that a lighted cigar will precipitate an explosion. No matter how the balls may roll for him, Sexton will not murmur; for he has got to play cushion-caroms or nothing. "Win or lose," says Slosson, "this is the last match at that game I shall ever enter into." We shall see.

THE TRIP TO PARIS.

There seems to be trouble about it. Daly and Schaefer were to have gone in the French steamer on Oct. 10. Daly will not go until Oct. 16, and then in an English steamer. Last week he said he would not go with Schaefer, and would not go at all unless well paid for his trip. It was then understood that Schaefer and seven others had secured passage in the French steamer of the 10th; but in The World of Oct. 9 Schaefer is made to say that "he will not go until the 16th or 17th, and that Daly will not accompany him." There seems to be trouble elsewhere, too. Dan Strauss informed us on Oct. 6 that he was to have gone with Schaefer, and that he had that day made an appointment with Schaefer to complete the details, but that Schaefer had failed to keep it. There was blood in Daniel's eye, and he made an appointment for the following day with the intention of unbosoming himself as to the Paris "hippodrome." This appointment he did not keep. Prior to making it, he volunteered to call upon another party at another place with the same view of unbosoming. There is not much that he can tell this party that he does not know already. It is significant that Daniel did not keep this appointment, either. Perhaps the announced postponing of Schaefer's sailing-day has had something to do with it, and maybe Mr. Strauss is to go along, after all.

JOSEPH KING and Albert M. Frey, pool-players, will please call or send for letters for them in our care.

STRAY SHOTS.

 Frank Holley of Syracuse and Albert Frey did "pool" at the Tremont House, this city, Oct. 3. Frey won 11 games to 3. Subsequently, Thomas Malone and William Wallace played best six in eleven games, announced as for fifty dollars, and Malone won by 6 to 2.

 At Steinbrenner's room, Baltimore, Oct. 1, Thomas Wallace defeated Schaefer at straight rail by 300 to 189, and Daly defeated Wallace at cushion-caroms by 100 to 97. They were to have given an exhibition at the room No. 66 West Fayette street on the following night.

 A room in Paterson, N. J., just fitted up with the U. S. Standard Co.'s tables, was formally opened on the night of Oct. 1, when Heiser and Slosson gave an exhibition. At cushion-caroms Slosson averaged 12⅛; but it was on a 4½x9 table, and the game was only 75 points up.

 Joseph A. Walker of New Orleans was in this city last week.

 Maurice Daly and Schaefer sail for Europe shortly. Daly is to manipulate the wires, and we tender him a bit of advice. If Vignaux tries to get even on the "match" at the Academy of Music on June 12 last, as to which he and Schaefer "whacked up" the door-money, and Vignaux lifted up his voice and his heels because he got only about one hundred dollars, let Daly keep his lips closed.

 His last practice-game prior to his going back to Chicago was played by Slosson on the night of Oct. 8 at his room. Heiser during the first hour had the gait of a thoroughbred racehorse. With repeated runs of from 15 to 30, he got into his fifth string ahead of Slosson, who, however, had been hanging to his skirts through playing a strong game himself. Before Heiser knew where he was, Slosson now added 200 points to his string while Heiser was putting up 21 more on his, so fast did Slosson travel and so steadily, no run being higher than 42. They played 400 points up, and Slosson won. His average was not kept, but it could not have been less than 3¾ points to the run.

 The tournament at Monarch Hall, St. Louis, is maintaining its interest unabated. Catton has beaten Reed, Nelson has beaten Donovan, Knight has beaten Sawyer, and Sawyer has been beaten by Reed. It is a handicap tournament, but the handicapping is mixed, in some cases taking the form of points, while in others one man plays a different game from his opponent. St. Louis still leads the universe in the matter of experimenting on a billiard-table.

 A prominent Western roomkeeper has been trying to buy "The White Elephant," this city. Not even the tusks of that famous and profitable animal are in the market.

 The following has been made public: "Married on Sept. 30, by the Rev. Father Langlois, Joseph Dion of Montreal to Miss Mary R. Hathorn of New York. No cards."

 There was a formal opening for the season of L. C. Newhall's Assembly Rooms, Brooklyn, on the night of Oct. 4. Slosson and Heiser were the star players who entertained a goodly throng. The selections from their repertory on this occasion were cushion-caroms and straight-rail. Slosson was victorious at both. His best run at the former was 26, and at the latter 97.

 Charles E. Mussey of St. Louis, accompanied by his son, arrived in Chicago on Oct. 6.

 "The Kennel," a room containing six U. S. Standard tables and fitted up in rich style, with carpet on the floor, etc., was formally opened on the night of Oct. 5. Eighth avenue, on which the room is located, turned out and filled it so that the exhibition players had scarcely standing-room. Two games were given as a part of the exhibition, Slosson winning both. One was cushion-caroms, 75 points up, and Slosson made the best run—25; and the other was the regular game, 400 points up, in which Heiser scored the best run—241. It was cleverly made by drives from all parts of the table, playing "the rail" being out of the question. George H. Ellis is in charge of the new room.

 The final result of the tournament at the Collender Hall, Chicago, was the success of Mr. Griffiths, who in the play-off game defeated Mr. Saal, who thus took second prize.

 Joseph Gleason last week changed the tables in his Third-avenue room, putting in those of the U. S. Standard Co. Heiser, with the assistance of Slosson, was to have given an exhibition there on the night of Oct. 9.

 The pool tournament projected by Thomas Foley, proprietor of the Collender Hall, Chicago, is to begin on Oct. 15.

 A new room, located at the corner of Washington and Avery streets, Boston, was opened on Oct. 4. The proprietor is Charles P. Gleason.

SPORTING NOTES.

.... A gentleman at Tiverton-on-Avon, Bath, Eng., claims to have created a revolution in the game of skittles by transferring the venue of the sport from the alley to the lawn, where some ten cones are driven into the ground with a flat surface upwards. A corresponding number of neatly-constructed ninepins are fixed on the flat surface of the cones; there are three handsome balls, and these, with a net something like a cricket "practice-net," complete the entire set. Any number of players can join in the game, which can be enjoyed on any moderate-sized lawn.

.... "The Assembly" is the suggestive name given to a handsomely-fitted-up establishment for the sale of beverages both mild and searching, located at No. 3 Hudson street, a few doors above Chambers. The friends of the popular proprietor, John Ahrens, assembled there in force on Oct. 3, "opening day," and gave him a right royal send-off on the road which all hope will lead to prosperity. Ambitious politicians and others desiring to become members of "The Assembly" now have a chance to "shout" and be heard.

.... At the tennis tournament held at Camp Washington, Staten Island, Oct. 3, 4, 5, by the Ladies' Club for Outdoor Sports, the prize for the ladies' singles was won by Miss Goodwin of the Franklin (N. J.) Archery Club, defeating Miss Robinson, New Brighton Club, by 6-2 and 6-5, the latter securing one game by 6-4. The ladies and gentlemen's doubles were won by Miss Goodwin and Mr. Greenough, defeating Miss Ward and Mr. Shippen by 6-2 and 6-3.

.... The senior tennis tournament at Yale College resulted as follows: Jenks first, Doolittle and Sheton second. In the freshmen tournament Haven was first and Thomas second.

.... The Harvard Tennis Association on Oct. 2 held an election, resulting as follows: President, G. R. Agassiz, '84; vice-president, H. A. Taylor, '86; secretary and treasurer, G. W. Hoyt, '85; stewards, A. Curtis, '84; Pierson, '85; Minot, '86; and Kuh, '87.

.... The woodcock-shooting season in New Jersey opened on Monday, Oct. 1. Last week golden plover were bagged in large quantities on the coasts of that State and Long Island.

.... The cool weather experienced during the past month having admonished the birds to continue their flight further Southward, rail-shooting on the Delaware has been exceedingly poor this Fall.

.... A novel race between a pigeon and a pony has just taken place at Bedworth, Eng., the former flying a mile and the latter galloping half a mile. A capital start was made, the starter standing halfway between the pigeon and the pony, and after a most exciting race the bird won by eighty yards.

.... Thomas Scotton, who for many years has officiated as referee in most of the principal pigeon matches and sweepstakes held in and around Nottingham, Eng., died at his residence, the Crown Inn, in that town, at a late hour on Monday night, Sept. 17. The deceased was sixty-

AQUATIC.

KNICKERBOCKER YACHT CLUB.

The postponed regatta of this club was sailed on Saturday, Oct. 6, and was one of the best ever held by the organization. The starters numbered thirty-two, which were divided into eight classes, the course for all except the eighth being from off the club-house at Port Morris to and around the Gangway Buoy and return, being a distance of twenty miles. The boats of the eighth headed for home after turning the buoy at Fort Schuyler. The wind at starting was east-southeast, of fair strength, and the tide flood. The boats went over the line with booms to port, and as they sped away the sight was one to remember. The members and guests of the club on board the accompany steamer Harlem manifested much interest in the contest, especially as regarded the rival yachts Gracie and Nettie Thorp. The latter gained the lead off Whitestone, the Gracie being close behind, both in advance of all the rest of the fleet, which were well bunched. In the meantime the Mystery and Supervisor had withdrawn from the race, the former because she had been badly left at the start, and the latter for the reason that her mainsail was split. At the Throgg's Point buoy, off Fort Schuyler, the order was as follows: Nettie Thorp, Gracie, Ethel, Susie A., Corinna K, Rover, Lena and Sara. A little more than two minutes later the Gracie assumed the lead, but upon the wind hauling more to southward the Ethel was especially benefitted and wrested the lead from the Gracie and was first around the Gangway buoy, the yachts being timed at that point as follows:

Ethel	1h. 04m. 30s.	Gilt Edge	1h. 26m. 50s.
Gracie	1 06 09	Rex	1 27 10
Nettie Thorp	1 06 35	Maggie	1 27 15
Susie A	1 12 50	Splash	1 27 34
Petrel	1 18 40	Musidora	1 27 35
Corinna K	1 19 00	Sea Robin	1 29 45
Lena	1 20 45	Nettie	1 29 55
Rover	1 21 05	Mary E. Coutant	1 31 05
Undine	1 24 10	Emmie	1 31 53
Lizzie R	1 25 01	Mayotta	1 36 38
Sara	1 25 35	Alice	1 37 20
Bon Ton	1 25 50	Vaddie	1 37 35
Whimbrel	1 26 00

After rounding the buoy the wind shifted further toward the west, and the boats were called upon to do some beating in the run back, sailing on the starboard tack well along to Barker's Point, and then weathering David's Island on the port tack, the little fellows here finding the wind very steadying. The Ethel maintained her lead all the way home, while the Gracie and Thorp kept up their close struggle, but the former held the pride of place to the finish. The appended table shows the order and time of arrival:

FIRST CLASS—CABIN SLOOPS OVER 28 FEET.

HARLEM YACHT CLUB.

The initial regatta of the reorganized Harlem Yacht Club was held Oct. 4, under bright skies and with a fresh breeze, which held on to the finish of the race. Seventeen yachts participated, and only three of them were not timed at the end. The course sailed over was from the anchorage off the foot of East 124th street, to and around the Stepping-stones light and return. At the Fort Schuyler buoy, where the boats were first timed, the Emma B. led by six seconds, with the Little Dean next, a long way ahead of the Fairy, who led the Comedy twenty-five seconds, she being exactly a minute ahead of the Mayotta. Time was next taken at the Stepping-stones light, which was rounded first by the Fairy, followed by the Nettie Thorp, Mayotta, Peerless, Lotus, Barker, Beecher, Musidora, Rover, Gussie V. and Annie B. The boats of the fourth class, half a dozen in all, had turned for home at the Fort Schuyler buoy. During the return journey there were frequent changes in the positions of the vessels, the final result being shown in the table given below;

THE NEW JERSEY YACHT CLUB.

The annual Fall regatta of this club, postponed from Sept. 15, took place on the 27th, and this time was sailed to a finish, although withdrawals and mishaps, caused by the stiffness of the southwest breeze, to a certain extent marred the success of the affair. There were fourteen starters, which were divided into three classes, and those which sailed the course in the upper bay and North River made excellent time, while their crews were kept busy as bees from beginning to end. The result is shown in the following table:

CLASS A—CATAMARANS.

	Start.	Finish.	Elapsed Time.	Corrected Time.

C. THOMAS, S. S. C., won the quarter-mile handicap at the thirty-guinea challenge cup competition of the Serpentine Swimming Club, held at Lambeth Baths, London, Eng., Sept. 24. He had a start of 28s. and his time, 7m. 21s., is the best he ever made. During the evening D. Ainsworth swam a half-mile with flippers in 14m. 2s.

A FOUR-OARED BOAT-RACE, for one hundred dollars a side, three-miles, turn, took place Oct. 3 on Lake Massabesic, near Manchester, N. H., the boat manned by C. D. Palmer, Thos. Carroll, P. Minturn and John Larkin defeating J. B. Conners, T. Landrigan, John Ford and John Parker.

H. W. COLLENDER, the billiard-table manufacturer of this city, has purchased from Gen. H. W. Perkins the schooner-yacht Tioga, 60ft. 11¼in. long over all, 15ft. ¼in. beam, 5ft. 8in. deep, 6ft. 9½in. draught.

HOSMER'S THREE-MILE RECORD.

Underneath we present copies of two affidavits we have received in substantiation of the genuineness of the performance of George H. Hosmer when he lowered the best authenticated three-mile single-scull record at the Hulton regatta. We can from personal knowledge vouch for the reputable character, as old citizens of Pittsburg, of all those whose names are signed to the documents (Mr. Liddell was for years Mayor of the city), while no one who is posted in boating matters during the past fifteen years or more will call in question the entire competency of Messrs. Liddell, Reese and Beaumont to intelligently perform duties with which long experience has rendered them thoroughly conversant, and which they have repeatedly discharged satisfactorily. Their endorsement of the achievement credited to the young Bostonian is therefore in every way worthy of being regarded as establishing the genuineness thereof. In explanation of this rare specimen of record-smashing at the end of a long season of regatta campaigning, we may state that the course at Hulton is such as to very materially favor the oarsman who secures a station where the current runs swiftest, and if he displays good judgment by availing himself of the chance afforded to escape the force of the current after turning, he can make considerably better time than on still-water courses, where he has no such advantages to aid him. No one who has watched the upward career of Hosmer during the past three seasons was actually astonished to hear that he had beaten the record, for they had been prepared to receive such information at any time during the past Summer, particularly so after the time accomplished by him in a private trial on the Merrimac leaked out. The real surprise was the nearness of James A. Ten Eyck to the winner at the finish, his time being the second fastest on record. We are not aware that Jimmy was ever before returned as doing inside of 21m., but it must be remembered that he had previously during the season done just enough rowing to put him in first-class form for the event on the Allegheny; and that he had got himself into grand form was shown by his rowing away from George Lee and taking second place in the final heat at the Sodus Point regatta, being dangerously close to Wallace Ross at the finish. Looking back at his career as an oarsman, extending over a period of more than ten years (he began very young), we can recall some highly-creditable match-races in which Ten Eyck was a principal, and, like good wine, he seems to improve with age, being, as was remarked by practical rowing men before his performance on the Allegheny, a bigger, stronger man and a more powerful, lasting sculler now than ever before. Here are the affidavits:

SWIMMING-RACES AT CHICAGO.

On the evening of Oct. 1, at the South-side Natatorium, Chicago, Ill., the closing festival was given. It was tendered to the instructor, Prof. T. B. Botevyle, as a benefit, and was largely attended, the programme being excellent. The following are the races and winners: Boys' race, 480ft. (four lengths of bath)—Won by R. C. Wallace, in 2m. 14s.; A. Herman second, by three yards. Match-race, ten lengths, between Robert Baum and Alf Bush—Won by Baum, by three yards, in 6m. 15s. Tub-race, two lengths—Won by Chas. Downes. Miss Lillie Jansen then made a daring leap from the rafters, about 40ft., and received loud applause. Ladies' race for speed, six lengths—Miss Albertina Wilhelm first, by six yards, in 4m. 56s.; Miss Lillie Jansen second; Mrs. C. Spitz, 0; Miss F. Eldridge, 0. Miss Wilhelm gives promise of becoming a great swimmer. She takes to the water naturally, and has a clean, beautiful stroke. She is but fifteen years of age, and has won several handsome prizes. Gen. Strong's two little daughters then gave an exhibition. They are aged respectively five and seven. They swam, dove and leaped from the gallery, a distance of 20ft. Prof. Botevyle then gave an exhibition of fancy swimming, eating, drinking, smoking, writing and sewing under the water; and Prof. Harrison showed how to rescue a drowning person and how to undress in the water. Professional-race, four lengths—Frank Coyle first, in 2m. 13s.; Thos. Hesdon second, by half a yard. This was a beautiful race from beginning to end. The entertainment concluded with a duck-hunt (Prof. Harrison being the duck) and a grand social swim. Frank E. Yates acted as starter and timekeeper.

THE OREGON.

This new steamer of the Guion line, which in her trial-trip in the Firth of Clyde Sept. 21 attained a rate of speed never before reached by an ocean vessel, left Liverpool for New York Oct. 6. As she is likely to become the champion of the Atlantic, a little information concerning her will be interesting to our readers. Her dimensions are as follow: Length, over all, 520ft.; breadth, 54ft.; and depth, 40ft. 9in.; horse-power, 13,000, while her gross measurement is about 7,500 tons. Electric lighting on the incandescent principle is introduced on board, and the fittings of the Oregon are unusually elegant. The most striking feature of the Oregon is her enormous steaming power. The engines are exceedingly simple in construction. The boilers are nine in number, and made entirely of steel. These boilers are tested to the extent of 220lb pressure on the square inch, though they are not intended to bear more than 110lb, a condition of things that leaves a large margin of safety.

KNICKERBOCKER CANOE CLUB.

The annual Fall regatta of this club was held on the North River, from the foot of Eighty-sixth street, this city, on Saturday evening, Oct. 6. The weather was cloudy and raw, but there was a pretty good attendance of spectators. Results: Paddling-race, Class B, 28 inches beam and over, half a mile—W. S. Allen's Jennie first, in 4m. 28s.; A. Loewenthal's Manche second, in 4m. 42s.; H. T. Keyser's Palisade third. Paddling-race, Class A, under 28 inches beam, one mile—J. L. Greenleaf's Coquago first, in 14m. 13s.; A. Loewenthal's Halcyon second, in 16m. 9s.; W. Dormitzer's Shatemuck third. Sailing-race, classes A and B, one mile—W. L. Green's Nettie first, in 26m. 20s.; W. L. Greenleaf's Coquago second. Sailing-race, one mile—August Brentano's Argo first, in 26m. 15s.; E. Fowler's Nettie second, in 26m. 25s. In the evening the club enjoyed a dinner at Martinnelli's.

FAST SWIMMING.—The sixth annual race for the one-hundred-yards amateur swimming championship took place at Lambeth Baths, London, Eng., Sept. 17, the final heat being won by W. Blew-Jones, Otter S. C., beating A. F. Bettinson by three-quarters of a yard, in 1m. 11s.....On the 19th, at an entertainment held by the Finsbury Park Club, at their baths, W. Blew-Jones won a race of 120yds. in 1m. 28⅗s. The contestants wore university costumes.....Sept. 20, at the Ilex Club's entertainment, held at Lambeth Baths, W. Blew-Jones accomplished another best-on-record, covering four hundred yards (ten lengths of the bath) in 6m 3⅘s. All of these times are better than had previously been accomplished by an amateur.

THE SERVIA of the Cunard Steamship line, left this port at 3.45 P. M. Sept. 26 and arrived at Queenstown at 9 P. M. Oct. 3, her apparent time being 7d. 5h. 15m., from which must be deducted 4h. 23m. for difference in time, making her mean time 7d. 42m.

THE SCHUYLKILL NAVY celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary by a review in the afternoon of Oct. 4, which was seemingly participated in by every oarsman belonging to the different clubs. In the evening the boathouses were illuminated.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT, ex champion sculler of England, contemplates an early return to the land of his birth, and has sent over a challenge, offering to row any north-countryman on the Tyne River for as much as $1,000 a side.

THE ILEEN, a new cutter built for Arthur Padelford of Baltimore, Md., was on Oct. 4 launched from the yard of Henry Piepgrass, Greenpoint, L. I. She will be ready for her trial trip in about ten days.

IN PARTNERSHIP.—Wallace Ross and Fred Plaisted have concluded to settle down in Pittsburg, Pa., at least for the Winter season, and on Oct. 3 they purchased the stock and goodwill of Tony Newell's saloon in the Diamond, that city, which they reopened the following evening.

THE MATCH-RACE between the catamarans Cyclone and Duplex, over the New Jersey Yacht Club course, will be sailed on Oct. 12.

BEACH vs. TRICKETT.

Satisfied that his defeat in his first race with Edward Trickett was due to the inferiority of his boat rather than to his want of ability, William Beach was not long in seeking another match, and, being accommodated by the confident ex-champion, they rowed again Aug. 18 over the Parramatta River course, Sydney, Australia, three miles 330 yards, for $1,000 a side. On this occasion Beach turned the tables on Ned, winning very easily in 22m. 50½s. It was Trickett's turn to be dissatisfied now, and he challenged his conquerer to row again on the same conditions. The match which resulted was rowed over the same course Aug. 27, and again Beach came home an easy winner. The latter race is thus described in The Sydney Sportsman: "The start was by mutual consent, which was effected on even terms, both men putting as much energy into their stroke as possible, and in the first one hundred yards the ex-champion took a lead of about half a length, pulling thirty-eight to the minute. After passing Uhr's Point, both settled down to a steady thirty-five, the pair of them rowing in splendid form. In making the shoot across to the mile at Blaxland's, Ned was going so well that his supporters offered to take the 6 to 4 hitherto going a-begging on Beach. Even betting, however, was the order on board, for on passing the mile point Trickett led by a length. This state of affairs, however, did not last long, for while Beach was pulling as strong as a lion, without betraying the least flurry, Trickett began to show signs of breaking up, and the Illawarra man putting on the steam, soon passed Trickett, and virtually had the race in hand. On passing Putney Beach was three lengths ahead (9m. 7s). Tennyson was reached with Beach still the same distance to the good, and the well-known point of Gladesville wharf was passed in 15m. 57s. by Beach, who was still holding the same advantage. Although Trickett tried manfully to reduce it, he could not make Beach extend himself, for in a few strokes the latter placed five lengths between them, and though he permitted Ned to draw upon him, he finally went in the easiest of winners, by two good lengths, in the quick time of 20m. 44s."

SEAWANHAKA YACHT CLUB.

A Corinthian regatta was held by the Seawanhaka Yacht Club in New York Bay on Saturday, Sept. 29. All competing boats except third-class sloops sailed over a course commencing off Fort Wadsworth, Staten Island, rounding buoy No. 8½ and the Sandy Hook lightship, and back to the upper hospital island. The starters in the class mentioned rounded Scotland light instead of buoy No. 8½. Of the third-class boats the Crocodile held the lead throughout, and as she finished before the arrival of the judges' boat her time could not be taken. In the schooner class both boats finished so late that they were not timed, also. The weather was not suitable for sailing, the wind being so light that the greater part of the race was a drift. Below is the summary:

	Start.	Finish.	Time Elapsed.	Corrected Time.

WHITE DEFEATS STEVENSON.

The scullers' match, three miles with a turn, between Louis White of the Pioneer Boat Club and Leander Stevenson of the Ariels was decided at San Francisco, Cal., on Sunday morning, Sept. 23. The weather and water were all that an oarsman could wish, and a large crowd of people assembled in the full expectation of witnessing a close contest. In this they were disappointed, for White proved to be an oarsman whole prowess was far and away better than that of his antagonist, who in his hands was something to play with. Going away from Stevenson at once, and increasing his lead at will, White was four good lengths ahead at the turning-point, which on the way back he enlarged to a score of lengths, finishing leisurely in the slow time of 23m. 37s. These figures, added to the ease with which the race was won, show how greatly overrated a sculler Stevenson has been. Referee, J. D. Griffin.

ELLIOTT VS. CLATOR.—The match-race, three miles with a turn, for $300 a side, between William Elliott of England and Ed. Clator of Wheeling, W. Va., was rowed on the Ohio River at Wellsburg, O., on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 6. The weather was inclement and there were few spectators, as little interest attached to the race. Elliott had quite an easy task, getting off with the lead, going around the buoy four lengths ahead and finishing about three lengths to the good in 21m. 10s. Referee and timekeeper, Robt. Liddell.

A DOUBLE-SCULL RACE in working-boats was rowed at Peekskill, N. Y., Oct. 5, over a three-mile course, Edward and Daniel Ward defeating Owen and Edward McDermott of Verplanck's Point, in 22m. 35s. The winners are nephews of the veteran ex-champion Josh Ward of Cornwall.

JOHN TWEED defeated David Kennedy in a two-mile race, for one hundred dollars a side, at Lowell, Mass., Oct. 6. They fouled twice.

THE SHAWMUT ROWING CLUB of Boston, Mass., were to have given a reception to their victorious oarsmen at the boat-house on the evening of Oct. 5.

THE NORSEMAN, Ogden Goelet's schooner-yacht, sailed from Cowes, Isle of Wight, for New York Sept. 14.

ATHLETIC.

ENGLAND'S FASTEST AMATEUR SPRINTER.

From the extracts taken from The London Field and published herewith it will be seen that a greater sprinter than Cowie has recently come to the front in England, and will, it seems reasonably likely, ere long crack all amateur records for the shorter distances, as he has already given them a rare shaking-up. "At the games of the Birchfield Harriers, held at Aston Lower Grounds, near Birmingham, Eng., Sept. 15, 17, a startling performance was accomplished in the sprint on the first day, the scratch-man, T. Ritchie of Bradford, winning his heat in the six-score-yards handicap in 11⅘s., and in the final, which was run in 11⅕s., he was beaten barely half a yard from the winner. The Aston track is undoubtedly a fast one, but at the same time it must be borne in mind that Ritchie has recently accomplished what no other amateur has hitherto approached on this path. When the championship meeting was held at Aston, and such good men as Cowie, Phillips, and Myers competed in the sprint, the time was returned as 10½s. Then, again, Ritchie was giving away almost impossible starts, nearly every man in the race being in receipt of between 7 and 13 yards. His recent performances will not, we think, be accepted as records, as a breeze was at the back of the runners; but that his last four performances have been exceptionally fine ones admits of no doubt whatever. At Hinckley Ritchie was timed to run 120yds. on grass in 11⅘s. That Ritchie is one of the fastest amateurs we have ever had we have not the slightest doubt. Although not nineteen years of age yet, he contemplates retiring at the end of this season; but we trust before he does quit the path an opportunity will occur for him to meet the present champion, J. M. Cowie, L. A. C. On the second day, in the scratch 100yds., Ritchie excelled himself, and gave the spectators a treat in the art of sprinting. He clearly demonstrated his ability to give the Birmingham crack, W. Livesey (Birchfield Harriers), a very decided beating, and his two runs can be dotted down as among the most memorable events of the season. After Saturday's performance a host of timekeepers had a watch on, and, though the time appears scarcely credible, no less than six watches showed 9⅘s.....On Sept. 18 an athletic meeting was held at the recently opened St. George's Recreation Grounds, Oakengates, near Wellington, Salop. The most interesting feature of the proceedings was undoubtedly the running of Ritchie, who showed a marvelous turn of speed, and won the 120yds. handicap from scratch in splendid style, getting home in the unprecedented time (for an English amateur, at any rate) of 11⅘sec. For several weeks past the Yorkshire sprinter has been rapidly improving, but his performance on Tuesday, when taken in connection with his display at Birmingham on the previous day, must certainly be said to have raised his reputation as a flyer to the highest obtainable point. The sprint-track in the St. George's ground is rather against the runners, a fact which makes Ritchie's latest show all the more extraordinary, as he had nothing in his favor, as at Aston, where the path is certainly an easy one. Good form was shown by others than Ritchie on Tuesday, but of course nothing in the way of record-breaking was accomplished, and, as a matter of fact, the times were so slow in the majority of the races as to lead to the conviction that some mistake must have been made in laying out the track, which was certainly in fair-going order."

ABSOLUTELY DANGER PROOF.

'Twas night—'twas dark—so dreadful dark
The blackest ink would seem as white.
I bent my ear—I gave a start;
Who dared to wheel on such a night?
When by me flew the silent steed,
The glimmer of tricycle light—
My anxious heart was quickly freed—
'Twas a Columbia—safe at night.

FOOTBALL IN BOSTON—HARVARD vs. WESLEYAN.

The first match of the season at football in Boston, Mass., was played on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 6, between the Harvard and Wesleyan College teams before about three hundred spectators. Harvard won the toss and at once forced the ball to their opponents' goal, where it remained during the entire three-quarters' of an hour. Wesselhoeft of the Harvards made both touchdowns, from the first of which a goal was made. In the second three-quarters the Wesleyans made it uncomfortably warm for the crimsons, rushing the ball into their territory and forcing a safety touchdown. This woke Harvard up and Hartley made a touchdown. The try for a goal was a failure. Austin afterwards kicked a goal from the field and then made a touchdown. Biddle closed the play with a goal from the field, making the score three goals, three touchdowns and one safety for Harvard to two safeties for Wesleyan. Wesselhoeft's brilliant runs were the feature of the game. Hartley played well, as did Beattys for Wesleyan. The teams were: Harvard—Rushers: Adams, Kendall, Bousal, Appleton (captain), Hartley, Gilman and Wesselhoeft; quarter-back, Craul; half-backs: Biddle and Austin; full-back, Codman. Wesleyan—Rushers: Gordy, Abbott, Thompson, Smith, Blaine and Wilcox; quarter-back, Upham; half-backs: Lagues and Beattys; full back, Judd. Umpires—For Harvard, Cabot; for Wesleyan, Richards. Referee, W. S. Camp.

BICYCLING IN BOSTON.

The first one hundred-mile road-race in this country took place on Saturday, Oct. 6, under the auspices of the Boston Bicycle Club. The entries were ten in number, viz., C. C. Wing, East Bridgewater; W. T. Packard, East Bridgewater; Theodore Rothe, Boston; J. F. McClure, Boston; Thomas Midgely, Worcester; J. E. Wood, Beverly; H. T. Wheeler, Worcester; L. A. Peabody, Marblehead; C. F. Frazer, Smithville; W. F. Morse, Norwood. All were from Massachusetts. The run was through South Natick, Welleseley, Grantville, Newton, Watertown, Cambridge, Medford, Malden, Saugus, Lynn, Salem, Beverly, Wenham, Hamilton and Rowley to 4½ miles beyond the centre of Rowley, and back on the same route to Brighton and Brookline; thence to the clubhouse in Union Park. The riders left Bailey's Hotel, South Natick, at 6.30 A. M., and the only ones to drop out were Wing, Packard, Wheeler and Morse. Wing broke the handle-bar of his machine and was badly shaken up by the consequent fall. Rothe fell and sprained his wrist, but pluckily rode it out. The party lunched at Rowley on the return trip. Midgely won easily, arriving at 4.17 P. M., and received the gold medal.

CHAMPIONSHIP LACROSSE MATCH.

After holding the title of champions for so long a period that it seemed useless for any team, however strong, to try to wrest it from them, the famous Shamrock Lacrosse Club of Montreal, Canada, were on Sept. 29 defeated on their own grounds by the Toronto Club, whom they had twice previously beaten during the present season. The players were as follow: Toronto—Ross McKenzie, goal; W. Hubbell, point; J. E. Garvin, cover-point; J. Drynan, F. W. Garvin, R. McPherson, defense-field; A. Blight, centre; S. Hughes, W. Donaldson, C. McHenry, home-field; E. Smith, O. Stowe, home. Shamrock—Lally, goal; McGregor, point; Butler, cover-point; Maguire, Hart, McKeown, defense-field; Devine, centre; Meehan, Green, Creegan, home-field; Heelan, Daly, home. R. B. Hamilton was captain of the Torontos and M. J. Polan of the Shamrocks. Umpires: Toronto, Lt.-Col. F. Bond; Shamrock, H. Starnes Jr. Referee, Major S. C. Stevenson. The first game was won by the Torontos in 16m. 30s., they also taking the second in 7m., while the Shamrocks captured the third in just one minute, and the visitors were victors in the next and deciding game, after 6m. play. Several tussles occurred between McKenzie of the Torontos and Daly of the Shamrocks, and after the match was over this was the cause of threatening demonstrations against the former by the partisans of the home-team; but fortunately the presence of the police prevented the expected assault.....On Oct. 6 a match was played by the Torontos and the Independents of Montreal on the grounds of the former, who won three straight games.

WHEELING IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The Fall races of the League of Essex County Wheelmen were held at Lawrence, Mass., Sept. 29. After the parade, which was participated in by numerous 'cyclists from other places, dinner was served, and in the afternoon races took place at the cricket grounds.

The first event was a one-mile race, best two in three heats—A. E. Davidson of Lynn won the first heat in 3m. 32s. and the second heat in 3m. 37¼s. W. O. Faulkner won the second prize; time, first heat, 3m. 34s.; second, 3m. 37⅗s.

The second event was a two-mile race, in heats—W. B. Segur of Andover won, W. C. Faulkner second; time, first heat, Segur, 7m. 50s.; Faulkner, 7m. 52¾s.; second heat, Segur, 7m. 58s.; Faulkner, 7m. 58¼s. Segur led from start to finish in both heats.

The third race was a five-mile dash. W. O. Faulkner won the first prize and John Tracy of Lawrence second. Time, Faulkner, 19m. 28s.; Tacy, 19m. 28⅛s. Tacy claimed a foul in the early part of the race, which was not sustained by the judges.

The last event was an obstacle race of half a mile. There were four starters in this race, which afforded a deal of amusement to the spectators, the contestants being obliged to dismount at intervals and clamber over numerous obstructions which had been placed on the track. The winners were P. Howard Shirley of Marblehead, first; and Henry Daniels of Lawrence, second.

The races were held under the rules of the League of American Wheelmen and were witnessed by about two thousand persons. Starter, T. S. Webb.

GEORGE AGAIN DEFEATS SNOOK.

Those rival Moseley Harriers athletes W. G. George and Wm. Snook met in a one mile match-race at the South London Harriers Sports, held on the Kennington Oval, Sept. 22, in the presence of more than six thousand people. The course was on grass, a quarter-mile in circumference, and was in fine order, but the strong breeze which blew across the grounds was against fast time. The Sporting Life gives the following account of the race: "W. G. George, Moseley Harriers, first; W. Snook, Moseley Harriers, second. Both men got great receptions when they came out, and there was great excitement when they toed the mark. Snook jumped off first, and after going thirty yards was, apparently on sufferance, two yards to the good. They were content to retain these positions, and passed the quarter in 59⅝s., and ran through the second lap without any noticeable change. The half was accomplished in 2m. 7⅝s., and one thousand yards in 2m. 27⅜s. About fifty yards beyond this point George made his first spurt, and before another fifty yards had been run was leading by two yards. So they passed the three-quarter mile—3m. 18⅜s. Racing now began in earnest. Snook went up again, and the pair were neck-and-neck at the Baths. A magnificent struggle followed—1,500 yards was made in 3m. 46s. Now the pair were fairly sprinting. At the Gasometers George slowly drew out to three yards. Snook was doing all he knew, but was gradually losing ground. In the straight he was five or six yards to the bad, and, seeing pursuit hopeless, he stopped a score of yards from the tape. George trotted for the last dozen yards; had he but kept up his previous rate of traveling he could have improved nearly a second. Time, 4m. 23⅜s."

BICYCLING AT WASHINGTON.—The bicycling races which took place at Athletic Park, Washington, D. C., Oct. 4, 5, resulted as follow: Two-mile handicap, open to all amateurs—A. H. One-mile professional race—First heat won by John Keen, England; John S. Prince, Washington, second; second and third heats won by Prince, Keen second. Time, 3m. 3⅗s., 3m. 7⅗s. and 3m. 6¾s. Five-mile race, for Capital Bicycle Club members—B. W. Hanna, first; J. McK. Borden, second. Time, 16m. 47⅗s. One-mile handicap, open to all amateurs—Won by B. W. Hanna, in 3m. 15⅕s. C. E. LILES (winner in 1881) and H. W. Gaskell (winner in 1882) had a rare race in the annual five-mile bicycle contest for the challenge cup of the Kildare Bicycle and Tricycle Club sports, held on the three-lap track at Lillie Bridge Grounds, London, Eng., Sept. 22. Liles barely won by a foot, in 16m. 4⅘s., both having ridden a slow and waiting race until the last mile. The last lap was run in 54⅘s.

THE LOTUS CLUB of Cincinnati, O., numbering one hundred and fifty-six members and having an athletic ground and gymnasium, gave a silver goblet and two gold medals for prizes in a twelve hours' go-as-you-please race (two hours nightly) Sept. 24 to 29. This will be the fifth annual terpsichorean event of the Acmes, and they intend to commemorate it by presenting a handsome souvenir to each lady and gentleman.

THE TWELVE-MILE DISTRICT ROADSTER RACE at the sports of the London (Eng.) Bicycle Club, held at Stamford Bridge, London, Sept. 22, was won quite handily by the West District, as represented by O. Thorn, whose time was 41m. 25⅕s.

AMONG THE MINERS.—Jim Smith, the retired pedestrian and present trainer of walkers, runners, etc., has concluded to settle down among the brawny lads who dig for dusky diamonds in the Keystone State, where he has passed much of his time during the season of 1883. He last week removed with his good wife and the rising generation of Smiths from the City of Churches to Shenandoah, Pa. He intends shortly opening a public house, and as it is a great sporting town the prospects for success are encouraging.

A ONE-MILE RUN took place at the Brockton, Mass., fair-grounds Oct. 6, Thomas McLaughlin winning in 5m. 14s., and defeating C. N. Howe, Jerry Hourihan and William Hollis.

J. D. DACEY and Al. Kent ran one-hundred yards, for $600, at Wakefield, Mass., Oct. 6, the former winning by three yards, in 11¼s.

THE TROJAN WHEELMEN have leased Lyceum Hall, Troy, N. Y., and are fitting it for bicycle-riding, lawn-tennis and a reception-room.

TIM HAGGERTY defeated Alf. Love in a race of 150yds., "for $1,000 a side," at Titusville, Pa., Sept. 28. The announced time was 15¼s.

THE RING.

MITCHELL AND SHERRIFF.

The simple result of the glove-encounter between Charles Mitchell and William Sherriff, alias "Prussian," which took place Oct. 2, was given in our last issue. That was all we could make room for, both because of the crowded condition of our columns and the fact that we were about sending our forms to press when the news was received. The affair, however, was not such as to merit extended notice, being too tame in character to even equal the expectations of those who looked for little else than a scientific-point display, while the great majority of the two hundred-odd spectators who, despite the public announcements relative to the nature of the match, went to Harry Hill's Pavilion anticipating a treat in the form of a genuine glove-fight between two acknowledged skillful exponents of the art, who were known to be on anything but terms of friendly intimacy, were most grievously disappointed. Both principals manifested a very wholesome regard for each other, neither caring to pursue offensive tactics, but each being bent upon making the other do the major part of the fighting, while he remained on the defensive. The inevitable result of such a state of things was that except at long intervals there was very little real milling during the six rounds of three minutes each, Queensberry rules, for which the agreement called, and consequently neither was noticeably the worse for wind or wear at the conclusion of the stipulated period. The gloves were soft, and not enough severe hitting had taken place to do any damage. It was not, therefore, to be wondered at that the crowd, many of whom had parted with ten dollars, expenses additional, for the sake of seeing "something real good," should be clamorous for a continuance, hoping that the combatants might yet "set about each other" in genuine pugilistic style. Under the conditions of the agreement, which called for a decision on the basis of points and endurance, neither man was obliged to toe the scratch again, but yet they could hardly refuse to do so under the circumstances, and they had another round, which turned out to be the best of the engagement, and in it Mitchell showed to the greater advantage. At its conclusion Billy Madden, for Mitchell, demanded a decision, refusing to allow his man to agree to the proposal of the opposite party to continue the contest. Harry Hill, the referee, stated that so far as points were concerned Mitchell clearly had the best of the encounter, but as endurance had also to be taken into consideration he felt it his duty to declare the fight (?) a draw. This decision seemed to surprise Mitchell and his seconds, and did not appear to please even the Sherriff party (who, relying on the gameness and staying qualities of their man, expressed a desire to fight to a finish), while it gave intense dissatisfaction to the crowd, and a scene of great confusion ensued. Madden could not place dependence on Mitchell's bad wrist, and would not, therefore, if for no other reason, consent to continuing, and he pulled off his principal's gloves, claiming that he had fairly won. This put an end to the affair just as darkness was beginning to gather, and the crowd dispersed, though most reluctantly, and expressing very great dissatisfaction with the whole affair. Subsequently Referee Hill, by way of explanation of a decision which, to say the least, was curious, stated in his own justification that when he, some days after receiving his copy of the written agreement governing the contest, informed Billy Edwards, Sherriff's representative in this city, that he must decline to officiate as referee if the "points and endurance" clause was meant, he was told by the ex-champion of lightweights that it was understood between the parties that in case both principals stood their ground during the six rounds agreed upon, the affair was to be declared a draw. This assurance seems to have relieved Hill's mind of all anxiety on that score, his long and intimate acquaintance with sporting matters and sporting people not suggesting the advisability of consulting the opposite side regarding a matter which, previously to seeing Edwards, he had deemed of sufficient importance to impel him to resign an office he at first had gladly accepted. This he ought certainly to have done for his own satisfaction and guidance, and if he could not conveniently do so at the time, because of Mitchell and Madden's absence from the city, he had every opportunity to consult them and have a complete understanding of the mutual wishes of both sides on the day of battle and before they had entered the ring. In such matters nothing that conflicts with a written agreement already in his possession should be considered by an official as worthy of a moment's attention, unless it is also put in writing. Had Harry followed this sensible plan of action, and rendered a decision in accordance with the facts, the justice of his decision could not have been fairly questioned, and he would have saved himself a deal of annoyance and adverse criticism. Madden declares that no such mutual understanding as that mentioned by Edwards was entered into. In a contest of six rounds, carried on with so little show of vigor as this was, there was no test of the enduring powers of the principals, and where at the conclusion matters were equal in this respect, it was manifestly right that a decision should have been rendered on the basis of points alone, which always take precedence in encounters of this description. It is no business of a referee to look beyond the stipulated period of fighting, and before giving a decision consider what might have been the result had other conditions prevailed and the men fought to a finish; he has only to decide upon the winner of the contest as waged under the agreement which he has stowed away in his pocket—anything else is clearly unjust to the party who may fairly be entitled to a verdict in his favor. Sherriff was seconded by Arthur Chambers and Billy Edwards, while Billy Madden and Joe Coburn waited on Mitchell. The latter's weight was stated to be 148 pounds, and he was much the lighter of the two, while in addition to his extra cleverness he possessed a great advantage in the important matter of age. All that was against him was the weakness of at least one of his wrists, which would probably have been much against his success in a prolonged fight. The parties upon meeting at Hill's for a settlement were somewhat surprised to find that but eighty-two tickets had been sold, the amount realized being in the neighborhood of eight hundred dollars. After deducting expenses, including seventy-five dollars for the boat belonging to and run by the referee, and fifty dollars paid to an alleged official of Flushing to avoid arrest, this left but little for each of those entitled to a share in the gate-money.

DEATH OF TOM CONNOR.

This pugilist, who twice defeated Tom Callas (on Aug. 21, 1860, for £15 a side, in the London district, beating him in 11 rounds, 58m., and again in October, 1861, when Callas succumbed to an unlucky blow, or, rather, the injuries received, on the second day, after fighting 37 rounds, 47½m.) died Sept. 11 from the effects of an injury sustained some two months since. He was standing outside the George, in Hammersmith Broadway, London, Eng., talking to a fellow-drayman, when the rope came up flush and threw him heavily. He received a severe blow on the temple, and was continually after this suffering from fits. At the inquest, held at the Prince of Wales, Fulham New Town, a verdict was returned to the effect that the actual cause of death was concussion of the brain, a large clot of blood traceable to the blow being found in the region of the brain. Connor fought many off-hand fights, and in the majority came off best, but could not be induced to do so since his unfortunate fight with Callas.

COBURN AND MITCHELL.

During the latter part of the present week Charley Mitchell, the English champion-boxer, and Joe Coburn, ex-champion of America, will pay a visit to Syracuse and Auburn, at each of which places boxing entertainments will be given, under the experienced management of Billy Madden. On Wednesday night, Oct. 17, they will give a joint exhibition at Irving Hall, this city, and as an extra attraction in addition to the display of science between the beneficiaries, Madden will then bet $250 against a like amount that Mitchell can defeat anyone in a three-round sparring contest, to be decided solely on the basis of points made, as in the annual competitions for the Marquis of Queensberry cups.

"DICK'S GAMES OF PATIENCE," comprising forty-four games of "solitaire" with cards, is the title of a work edited by William B. Dick, and issued in very attractive form by Dick & Fitzgerald of this city.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

JUDGE R. H. CLARK, Atlanta.—1. William M. Fleming died in this city in May, 1866. 2. He entered the army in 1861 as paymaster, was under Sherman during the march to the sea, and at the close of the war was made a brevet colonel in the regular army.

J. R. K., Lafayette.—It should be obvious to you that neither question can be definitely answered, and that to answer it definitely would of necessity be to give offense to the admirers of some actor other than the one that would be named. The term "best educated" is too vague. One actor can be thoroughly educated for his business, while another is educated for any business but that which he follows—one has a theoretical education that in large part is worthless, while the other has a practical education that is of inestimable value. As to your best Richelieu, some playgoers prefer the Richelieu of this actor, and others the Richelieu of that, and so it goes. There is no standard by which to absolutely determine which class of playgoers are the better judges. The different classes arrive at different conclusions through reasoning from different standpoints.

M. H., Togus.—1. They use buckskin shoes ordinarily. 2. Rosin is used on the soles. 3. About ten feet from the stage. The wire is sometimes taut and sometimes slack, according to the nature of the performances. The greatest height is attained when the cord or wire is stretched from the stage to one of the higher circles of the auditorium. This height varies with the construction of the theatre, and the cord is on an incline. 4. Sig. Germani is said to have juggled five balls with one hand in private, about forty years ago.

S. J.—There has been no such Old Bowery Theatre fire, it seems to us. That house has not been burned, at least notably, since April 25, 1845. The explosion referred to by you is probably the one that occurred when there was a fire or an alarm of fire at either the Atlantic Garden or the Pacific Garden. Inquire in the Atlantic Garden.

L. H., Toronto.—In "Squatter Sovereignty," produced two seasons ago at Harrigan & Hart's New Theatre Comique, this city, there was a song called "Paddy Duffy's Cart," which became very popular. That is very likely the origin of your query. We have no recollection that that name has ever been given to any piece played at any one of Harry Miner's three theatres here.

G. N. S., Hudson.—We do not keep a record of seating capacities or dimensions of stages, for the reason that they are undergoing change almost constantly. Besides, as to the seating capacity, there is no standard of measurement, and there are small houses that actually crowd in more people than much larger ones accommodate.

G., Cleburne.—There is no champion bareback rider of the world. The title is not recognized. There has never been any formal competition for it, and it is not likely that there ever will be. No two men ride precisely alike, and it is impossible to institute a comparison in the absence of a formal competition under fixed rules.

J. E. F., Boston.—In this department we furnish neither personal addresses nor whereabouts or routes of troupes. Watch our amusement-news pages for the latter, and address the manager in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office if you cannot find the location of his company.

J. M., St. Louis.—1. Miss Annie Russell, formerly of the "Esmeralda" cast, is the daughter of Mrs. Jane Russell. 2. She has been on the stage but two or three seasons. 3. She is not related to Miss Lillian Russell.

J. J. N., Quebec.—1. All the way from fifteen to seventy-five dollars a week. 2. It is not necessary that they shall read music, but it will be all the better for them if they can. 3. It would cost two dollars for one insertion.

MRS. R. B. C., Baltimore.—Ascertain the whereabouts of the company by reading our amusement-news columns, and address her accordingly; or you can address her in care of THE CLIPPER post-office.

PARKER.—Philip Blumenschein died in St. Luke's Hospital, Bethlehem, Pa., Dec. 19, 1882, as telegraphed that day to our issue of Dec. 23, in which you will find the obituary notice among the telegraphic amusement news.

CONSTANT READER.—1. Harrigan and Hart on Sept. 17, 1881, were playing where they are now. 2. "The Major" was the piece then. With it they had three weeks before opened their new theatre.

W. H. K., Washington.—1. Maggie Mitchell began to star almost as soon as she began to act, or about thirty years ago. 2. We do not give ages.

A. A.—It is simply a matter of individual taste which is the greater Shakespearian actor, Edwin Booth or Salvini. Some persons prefer Salvini's methods, and others prefer Booth's.

DAVE, Kokomo.—1. There has been but one Charlotte Thompson. 2. She has been before the public about twenty-five years, and prominently before it over twenty.

MODERN MONUS.—1. From about $50 to $75 a week. 2. The same. 3. "The Silver King" was not played there last season.

NO SIGNATURE.—Emerson's Minstrels opened at the Standard Theatre, San Francisco, Oct. 17, 1881.

J. B. D., Kansas City.—1. We answered you several weeks ago. 2. You did not then say that there was a wager.

W. G. N., East Saginaw.—The man who can beat answer that question is James Robinson. It is quite probable that he did.

CONSTANT READER.—Neither of them won the championship. There is no such title recognized, and for several reasons.

C. AND F.—The Brooklyn Theatre was burned Dec. 5, 1876.

OLD ACTOR, Lawrence.—Charlotte Crampton died Oct. 5, 1875.

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, Oct. 9.

Since our last, Daly's and Wallack's Theatre have begun their regular seasons. The former presented a novelty in "Dollars and Sense," and the latter the familiar comedy of "Masks and Faces," with a new Triplet and a new Peg Woffington in John Howson and Rose Coghlan to remind us of Charles Fisher and Laura Keene and Fanny Davenport, as well as of William E. Burton and Lottie Mitchell in the days when Charles Fisher had not yet played Triplet in the Bowery Theatre to the Peg of Kate Reignolds, and was playing Ernest Vane at Burton's to the Triplet of Burton himself. Howson makes a quite acceptable Trip, but Miss Coghlan was never intended for Peg—except by the management of Wallack's Theatre. This week the Fifth-avenue Theatre begins its regular season under the management of John Stetson. He has engaged Charles Coghlan as leading-man and Florence Gerard as leading-lady. It is announced that he pays Coghlan seven hundred dollars a week salary. Once in a while not much reliance is to be placed on announcements of this character. Nevertheless, Coghlan, who is clearly of a mercenary cast of thought, may have ground out of Stetson a promise of seven hundred a week. Charles is first, last and all the time for lucre. Seven years ago, when he first came to America, he was for "Money." Now that he reappears in America, he is again for "Money." It is always "Money," "Money," "Money!" It was at the Fifth-avenue Theatre that he went looking for it seven years ago; but he didn't get seven hundred dollars a week, although Augustin Daly was at that period the most liberal manager in the salary-line this or any other country had known. It is at the Fifth-avenue Theatre that Coghlan is in quest of "Money" now. What he is now doing with the role of Alfred Evelyn, and what Miss Gerard is doing with that of Clara Douglass, and whether or not Manager Stetson is likely to get any money out of this play of "Money," are must be some mistake about this; for the cable also says that 'there is nothing in the play that is not thoroughly proper and respectable." How such a play can command success in the French capital almost passes comprehension.....Science has achieved another great triumph. It has determined precisely how long and how much stuff it takes to kill an elephant. It was necessary recently to put one out of the way at the Imperial Menagerie, Schonbrunn. They gave him six hundred and fifty grains of prussic acid. There is now a "corner" in that drug; but the elephant was dead in eight minutes.....Shakespeare still lives. At the sale of the late Joseph J. Cooke's library, in Providence, R. I., Oct. 5, four editions of "The Divine William's" works, issued in 1623, 1632, 1664 and 1685, brought $750 apiece. This reminds us that the Common Council of Stratford-upon-Avon have just negatived the proposition, made in August last, that the remains of Shakespeare be taken up in order to compare the poet's skull with the monumental bust in the church there, and also to set at rest forever the question as to the correctness of the many conflicting portraits of him now in existence.....The ticket-speculating problem is possibly in the way of being solved. The Kiralfy Brothers intend bringing suit against the managers of Niblo's Garden to recover the same amount of percentage on the premium at which tickets to that house have been sold since the run of "Excelsior" began there that they are entitled to under their contract on the actual "box" returns. This will possibly raise the question whether or not a manager can give all his seats away in good faith, without having to "make good" to a star or combination the amount of percentage his contract calls for with the regular tariff of the theatre as a basis; and if he cannot do so, why he may not dispose of the same seats at a premium and enjoy the surplus himself.....Mrs. Langtry was to have sailed from Liverpool for this country last Saturday. She is to be accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Le Breton. The knowledge of this fact should tend to check the ungenerous publications of which Mrs. Langtry was the subject last season....Sarah Bernhardt has revived "Frou-Frou" in Paris. It may be of interest to our lady readers to learn how she clothes the part at present. She wears first a Pompadour satin overskirt, white satin bouillon skirt to match, the whole trimmed with ruched edges of cardinal velvet; second, a honeycombed velvet princess dress, trimmed with swansdown, over a white-laced skirt, embroidered in white jet; third, an old-gold plush dinner-dress and large visite to match, lined and turned up with crimson satin; fourth, a brown plush dress, with white applique, over a lace skirt with golden grelots; fifth, a gray silk over an Ottoman velvet skirt, profusely ornamented with velvet flowers.....In a sermon delivered in Edinburgh, Scotland, on Sept. 16, the Rev. Dr. McKay defended the stage. There is nothing singular in this. It can be defended on many grounds. The peculiar feature of Dr. McKay's sermon was that he admitted he had never seen a theatrical performance. Since then he has gone to see Henry Irving as Hamlet, and in a public criticism he takes that actor to task for what he regards as incorrect readings of Shakespeare. The clergyman's reasoning is generally sound, and his critique is an able paper.....A vocalist who is known as such on both sides of the Atlantic has made known her recipe for a cough. Its simplicity should commend it to everybody, while people with a palate to be tickled will certainly welcome it. It is a half-dozen oysters on the half-shell. She even gives them to her children when they have a cough. Fourteen years' experience has satisfied her that for this ailment the oyster-counter is far ahead of the drug-store. Still, it is odd that so many men who eat oysters raw and in all other ways should be troubled so often with a cough. But we suppose much of the virtue of the oyster as a curative depends upon the time of day — or of night — at which it is eaten. Too many men eat oysters when the bivalves should be asleep..... This is election-day in Ohio, and the patriots are astir. A most appropriate song for them to sing would be "Kathleen Mavourneen," which has one line strikingly suggestive: "It may be for years, and it may be Foraker."

CITY SUMMARY.

THE FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE, under the direction of John Stetson, opened its doors for the season of 1883-4 on the night of Oct. 8. The auditorium was not quite crowded, but the assemblage it held was fashionable and brilliant. The play was "Money," and it served to introduce to an American audience Miss Florence Gerard, an American who had never before appeared in this country, as well as to reintroduce Charles Coghlan. The latter has gained flesh about the face, but is scarcely stouter in body. His Alfred Evelyn, spite of the actor's fixed mannerisms, is here and there a very clever performance, showing deep study, and he was several times called before the curtain, at the close of the fourth act making a speech of thanks. It was in the same role, and at the same theatre, in 1876, that the gentleman made his first appearance in this country, and hence it is not necessary for us to dwell upon his impersonation of it. The piece is one that is better off the modern stage than on it, and it is not likely that the management of the Fifth-avenue Theatre intend to retain it any longer than is necessary to serve Mr. Coghlan for reintroducing him to us in a "crank" part that seems to be regarded by him as a favorite. Miss Gerard as Clara Douglass was not so well placed as one should have been who was appearing for the first time before strangers. So little is there of the part that it requires an actress of many years' experience to make much of it; and Miss G. is yet very young professionally, as well as in years. Naturally, she was nervous on this occasion, and this was a serious drawback. Nevertheless, she had a very kindly audience, and she gave a generally pleasing impersonation of Clara. It is not unlikely that in other roles she may intrench herself as a favorite with the audiences of the Fifth-avenue. She is slight in figure and has a face that is pleasing, although not one that would be recognized as of the professional stamp. Flowers were abundant for her, as well as for Mr. Coghlan. In the various changes of costume called for by the five acts of "Money" the lady displayed a rich yet tasteful wardrobe whenever the sign of riches was permissible. The wardrobe of Emily Jordan Chamberlain was also noticeable, and in the Scotch reel with Graves her stockings were a revelation, both as to color and breadth of stripe and as to—quantity of stocking. Her Lady Franklin was a performance that was enjoyed by the audience, as also was the Graves of Charles Wheatleigh. The cast was a notable one for the veterans it comprised. In addition to Mrs. Chamberlain and Mr. Wheatleigh, favorites at Burton's Chambers-street Theatre and Niblo's Garden thirty years ago and more, there were John Jack as Sir John Vesey, G. H. Griffiths as Stout, and George Browne as Sharp. Of the younger members of the cast, Walden Ramsay was at home as Sir Frederick Blount, Herbert Kelcey was a thoroughly satisfactory Dudley Smooth, and Netta Guion, without looking like a Georgiana Vesey, spoke the lines well enough. The leader of orchestra here is Charles Puerner, formerly of Niblo's Garden, and later of Booth's.

BUSINESS continues good at the London Theatre, where we noticed quite a large audience on Monday night, who seemed well pleased with the amusement-fare presented. After a minstrel introductory the following artists appeared in their specialties: Tom Flynn in Irish business; Prince Adolphe, horizontal-bar performer; Mlle. Ellsworth, vocalist; Revillo, magician; Lizzie Davis, vocalist, as the Quakeress; Clark and Ryan, song-and-dance; Jennie Southern, songstress; John L. Manning on the trapeze-bar; Virginia Marshall in character changes; Fields and Leslie, who introduce vocal duets with clog-dancing; Lotta Zalla, who swings Indian clubs; the Ventinis, hat-spinners; the Inmann Sisters, clog and reel-dancers; Nellie St. John, vocalist; Hallen and Hart in their sketches; and for the finish several members of the company appeared in "Slattery's Boarding-house."

HARRY MINER'S BOWERY THEATRE was crowded on the night of Oct. 8, when the Howard Athenæum Star Specialty and Comedy Co., who then began a week's engagement there, furnished the entertainment. The programme, which is brimful of good features, opened with Walton and Edwards, Dutch comedians, in their specialty of "Rudolph and Ricker Kline;" then Clara Franklin contributed a budget of serio-comic songs, Wood, Beasley and the Weston Brothers gave their musical absurdities, Charles Fostelle was seen in female impersonations, John E. Henshaw and May Ten Broeck appeared in their sketch of "Deception," Lester and Allen, comedians, created "Excitements," Maud Beverly sang in a serio-comic vein, Kelly, Murphy and McNulty gave a gymnastic exhibition, the Russian Athletes did their pedestal and balancing trick-ladder act, the Two Macs gave their very funny specialties, and the show closed with Charles Fostelle and the company in "Mrs. Partington."

MUSICAL NOTES.—Aimee appeared at the Fifth-avenue Theatre Oct. 2, 4, in "La Fille de Mme. Angot," with Angele as Mlle. Lange. She was seen also in "La Princess des Canaries" 5 and in "Divorcons" 6. Mlle. Nixau sang in "Boccaccio" 3 and matinee 6. The French-opera Troupe is in Brooklyn this week, and will be at the Standard Theatre Oct. 22.....Aimee, Angele, Nixau and M. Nigri were the soloists at the Casino at the Sunday-evening concert 7. "Prince Methusalem" is still on at this house.....The Raynors appear at Koster & Bial's Concert Hall this week.....The Symphony Society under Dr. Damrosch's direction will begin their season Nov. 16 at the Academy of Music.....Everything looks favorable for the certain opening of the new Metropolitan Opera-house on the date fixed, Oct. 22. An auction-sale of seats remaining unsubscribed for the first performance will take place at Steinway Hall Oct. 12.

FOR THE BENEFIT of Herd No. 2, B. O. of Buffaloes, a variety performance and reception is to be given in Turn Hall Theatre, 66 and 68 East Fourth street, Oct. 16.

CHARLES W. ROBERTS is in town preparing for the appearance of Fred Warde at Haverly's Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., Oct. 15.

THE OPENING ATTRACTION of the regular season at Daly's Theatre Oct. 2 was a new comedy in three acts, adapted from L'Arronge's "Ein Lustspiel aus dem Leben" (a comedy from life) by Augustin Daly, and christened "Dollars and Sense, or the Heedless Ones." Mounted with new and handsome scenery by James Roberts & Son and with sumptuous furniture, upholstery and appointments, it was acted with this cast:

Mr. Pierce Tremont, Charles Fisher	Lizzie Tremont, Miss Lizzie Jeremy
Eliphalet Lamb.....James Lewis	Hope Hemmarsly, Miss May Fielding
Colonel Jefferson Quincy Briggs, Charles Leclercq	Sybilla Briggs, Miss Virginia Dreher
Jack Hemmarsly.Yorke Stephens	Mrs. Saphira Lamb, Mrs. G. H. Gilbert
Harry Lattimer.....John Drew	Jane.....Miss Bell Brown
Griggles.....W. H. Thompson	Lyddy.....Miss Mazie Marshall
Roberts.....W. H. Beekman
Phronie.....Miss Ada Rehan

The comedy is of a farcical nature, and although it contains little that is new in its matter or in the method of its treatment it is amusing. Still the butter has been very thinly spread upon this slice of the dramatic loaf. The first act, which serves simply to introduce the characters, is too talky, and consequently prosy. The second act is very diverting, and it elicits roars of laughter. There is, however, an anti-climax at its end, which cannot be avoided without seriously belittling James Lewis' role and correspondingly enhancing that of Mrs. Gilbert; therefore it must be pardoned upon the ground of dramatic license, or policy. The last act, which is devoted to the clearing-up of the complications, suffers by comparison with its predecessor, and lacks dash and effervescence. The action of the comedy is supposed to take place in Washington, D. C., and a brief synopsis of the story may be thus given:

At the rising of the curtain we are introduced to the home of Percy Tremont and his second wife, Lizzie, a young woman who aspires to be a leader in society. Hither come most of the principal characters as visitors. Jack Hemmarsly, a banker, has married Hope, a daughter of Eliphalet and Saphira Lamb, and their home-life is uncongenial by reason of her avoiding society and declining to entertain company at their residence. Jack is driven to the clubs for excitement, and his frequent absence arouses Hope's jealousy. He has also fallen desperately in love with Sybilla Briggs, an adventuress claiming to be the wife of Col. J. Q. Briggs of Vermont, late of the Egyptian army—in reality a confidence man. Harry Lattimer, a young lawyer and a friend of the Hemmarslys, who knows Hope's true worth, resolves to save Jack from the pit into which he is about to fall. In a private interview with Mrs. Briggs he informs her that prior to becoming a lawyer he had served as a cavalry officer in the regular army, and that while in the Southwest he had met her as the alleged wife of a Mexican officer; that he is fully aware of her scheme to aid the Turkish Colonel in plundering Jack by winning his affection, and that unless she complies with his demands he will publicly expose her. Sybilla, finding herself at his mercy, asks the terms of his silence, and is told that her immediate flight is necessary, it being finally agreed that she may reside in New York City. She manages to tell Jack that she is suddenly compelled to leave for the metropolis, when he instructs her, upon her arrival there, to telegraph him: "Come at once; important business—Brown & Brown," and he will join her the next day. Pleading a short memory, she requests him to write it down, which he does. In the second act, at the home of the Hemmarslys, we find Jack preparing to leave for New York in response to the telegram which has been received and read by his wife. She appeals to Harry Lattimer as to its genuineness, and he is obliged to endorse it, as he is a firm of Brown & Brown is well known. Harry is nonplussed. He confides to Phronie Tremont, with whom he is in love—although on account of her extreme youth she will not so understand it—his plan to save Jack, and asks her assistance. At length it comes out that at the time of the flight of Mrs. Briggs she dropped a glove containing a card bearing the words "Brown & Brown." Acting at once on this clue, Harry telegraphs to a friend in New York, asking him to send a message at once to Jack in effect as follows: "Need not come. Advices by mail. Brown & Brown," and this telegram is delivered to Jack just as he is about to start for the railroad station. During this scene Eliphalet Lamb comes prominently to the front. For the first time in twenty-five years he is free from the "restraining influence" of his wife, who has been called to their Pennsylvania home by a strike among the workmen in one of their mills. Eliphalet intends to make the most of his liberty. He makes love to Lyddy, the servant, and an arrangement with Jack to pass the night at the club. It should be stated here that a short time before this, when Eliphalet was absent from the stage, one of the characters reads in an evening paper an account of the sudden death of Mr. Peabody, a life-long friend of Eliphalet. Mr. Lamb now receives a letter from his wife stating that she will rejoin him at once and containing many words of condolence, which is all Greek to him, as he is ignorant of Peabody's death. All he thinks of is the loss of the night's debauch at the club; but as he has an inkling of the bogus telegram business from a partial confession made to him by Jack he goes out and causes a telegram to be sent to himself from Mr. Peabody, asking him to come to him at once on important business. On his return he meets his wife and is nonplussed at her conversation. The telegram arrives, and Mr. Lamb after perusing it tells his wife he is called away on most urgent business. As he starts to go his wife inquires whom the telegram is from, and, being told his old friend Peabody, she ejaculates: "Why, he died yesterday," as the curtain falls. Jack resolves to remain true to his own wife, who will henceforth make his home more attractive, Harry wins the hand and heart of Phronie, and all ends happily.

Among the company are two newcomers—W. H. Thompson, recently of San Francisco, Cal., who played the small part of Griggles, a butler, quite artistically, and Miss Lizzie Jeremy, whose impersonation of Mrs. Tremont was colorless and her acting indifferent. Charles Fisher, although his abilities were not heavily taxed, was quiet and gentlemanly. James Lewis was happily fitted and played his role with much spirit, making the hit of the piece. Charles Leclercq as the bogus Turkish Effendi, who confined his confidence operations to sponging on his friends for meals and borrowing money with a tone of demand rather than entreaty, was quite successful in concealing his personal identity and in giving an even and well-sustained characterization. Yorke Stephens and John Drew both did well. Ada Rehan was in every way satisfactory, although her role was but a faint shadow of other similar ones played here by her. May Fielding was well suited for the "goody-goody" wife. Mrs. Gilbert's Mrs. Lamb was a conspicuous feature, and so artistic and enjoyable that the audience, like Oliver Twist, desired more. Virginia Dreher, who is rapidly ascending the dramatic ladder, made an admirable adventuress, being handsome and acting with much dash and spirit. Mazie Marshall, a very pretty girl, in the brief role of a waiting-maid, gave promise of much better things. Business has been large. "7-20-8" is underlined for revival, and A. W. Pinero's "Boys and Girls" for an early production. Mr. Daly's aids this season are Henry Widmer, leader of band; James Roberts, scenic-artist; John Moore, stage-manager; James Tait, master-machinest; John Welch, gas-engineer; Mrs. Nagle, wardrobe; Bernard Schulzer, properties; and John Farrington in the box-office.

MINER & CANARY continue to be fit subjects for congratulation on account of their successful efforts to entertain the lovers of variety on the West-side. There was a large audience present at their Eighth-avenue Theatre on Monday evening, Oct. 8, to greet Evans, Bryant & Hoey's Meteors, who then began a week's engagement. A regular feast of fun was provided, the programme commencing with the amusing bit entitled "Needles," in which Fred J. Huber assumed the prominent character; followed by the O'Brien Brothers in an acrobatic act which excited admiration and surprise; Ed. and Maud Werner in their operatic and character-sketch of "This Place Suits Me," in the course of which they mingle humor and choice musical selections; James F. Hoey, one of our most entertaining comedians, in his specialties; those accomplished dancers the French Twin Sisters in their always well-received terpsichorean exercises; Bryant and Hoey, whose performances on a variety of musical instruments, flavored with witty sayings, gained for them a due share of applause; Henry Vaughan, imitator of birds, animals and insects, also introducing a cage of trained singing birds; the Fletcher Trio—Charles, Lillie and William—expert skatorial artists, in trick and fancy skating, juggling, etc., constituting a very pleasing act; Torritti, whose performances on the invisible wire agreeably varied the entertainment and challenged admiration; Conroy and Dempsey, a talented couple who strive hard to please in character songs-and-dances, and never fail to "catch on" with "Nature's Mirror;" the dessert consisting of the comedy-sketch of "The Book-agent," in which C. E. Evans is supported by the full strength of the brilliant Meteors. Commencing Oct. 15, N. S. Wood as Jack Harkaway.

ALTHOUGH THE SEASON for picnicking amid shady groves and by babbling brooks is at an end, people continue to go in goodly numbers to the picnic of their old friends the Mulligan Guards, at the Theatre Comique, where a vast amount of fun is to be enjoyed six nights in the week.

"EXCELSIOR" still glides smoothly along on the top of the favoring tide, there being no apparent diminution in the crowds who assemble nightly at Niblo's Garden to feast their eyes upon the scenic riches and the wealth of well-displayed feminine loveliness spread before them.

THE NEW YORK MUSEUM will have a special attraction next week in Victoria Fair, a girl with four arms, four legs, four hands and four feet. Dates are open to curiosities at that house, and also for specialty performers. Managers Morris & Hickman have a card on another page, to which managers and performers are referred.

THE BIJOU THEATRE has been leased by Edwin F. James to Robert E. J. Miles and Wm. B. Barton for three years from May 1 last at an annual rental of $16,500.

WEDNESDAY MATINEES at the Fourteenth-street Theatre during Fanny Davenport's engagement have been abolished.

AT LAW.—The Kiralfy Brothers have commenced an action against Poole & Gilmore of Niblo's Garden, and some testimony has been heard in the Supreme Court Chambers before trial to enable the Kiralfys to frame their complaint in the action. They claim 57½ per cent. of the gross receipts of Niblo's Garden during the run of "Excelsior," also a share of $2,500 paid by James Brown to the managers for the right of speculating in tickets in the lobby and also a share of the extra rates charged by the speculators.

"THE GLASS OF FASHION" is to be seen at the Fifth-avenue Theatre this season.

BUSINESS HAS BEEN SO LARGE at the Fourteenth-street Theatre that Manager Colville has been obliged to display the legend "Standing-room Only" on several nights. The desire to see "Fedora" is irrepressible, as it is one of the strongest emotional dramas of modern times. The action has gained in smoothness by repetition, and now that Miss Fanny Davenport has entirely overcome the nervousness naturally attendant upon so important a production her impersonation of the same character has correspondingly gained in intensity and sympathetic feeling. As Sardou, the author of the drama, has been publicly accused of having plagiarized it from Adolph Belot's "Drame de la Rue de la Paix," he has written a letter to Miss Davenport explaining precisely the sources from which he derived his inspiration. In the letter he refers to the fact that almost every one of his earlier plays was accused of having a family resemblance to a dramatic predecessor, and says that as "Fedora" had something—a very little—in common with Belot's play, it was to be expected that someone would cry "Stop thief!" He argues at length that the two plays have nothing in common except this starting-point, and even that, he asserts, was not inspired by Belot's play. "It is by no means to Belot that I owe the first idea of 'Fedora,'" says M. Sardou. "It is to history. I was reading one day about the quarrels of Philip II and his secretary, Antonio Perez. The adventure is well known. Perez had, by formal order of the King, caused Escovedo to be assassinated. Shortly afterwards the King, becoming convinced that the Princess Eboli, his mistress, was too intimate with the very gallant secretary, treacherously prompted the parents of Escovedo to bring Perez to justice as the author of their son's death. Perez, seeing that he was to be sacrificed, fled to Pau. The hatred of the King pursued him there. Agents after agents were despatched to seize the fugitive, or to surprise and kill him. But Perez was on his guard. All efforts were abortive. It was then that the King conceived a trick the curious details of which Perez has transmitted to us in his memoirs. They found, he says, 'a very beautiful lady, amiable, and, above all, a woman in every sense of the word, and offered her 10,000 crowns and six fine Spanish horses on condition that she should go to Pau, there enter into amorous relations with Perez, draw him to her house and there give him up to the bravos of the King during the night.' The lady accepted the bargain, went to Pau, conducted the affair very speedily; and behold Perez bewitched, fascinated—he is lost!—when suddenly the lady was seized with a grand passion for her victim, and at the moment when she was to deliver him to the fellows lying in ambush 'in a sudden burst of emotion,' says Perez, 'she revealed to him the whole affair of the bargain that had been made, and, better still, wishing to make amends to her own conscience for the intention she had harbored in the beginning, she gave him her own house for an asylum, together with such protestations of love that one need not be a great sorcerer to divine what were the relations which united those two hearts.' I saw here," says M. Sardou, in conclusion, "an excellent subject for a play, except for the degradation of the heroine, who for 10,000 crowns and six horses was going to hand over a man to the executioner. But if that woman, instead of being a spy, was an avenger, the sister, the wife, the betrothed of Escovedo—it would put a different face upon the whole matter. Ready to deliver him up to an ignominious death, she establishes his innocence; the rest follows of itself. And that is the whole of 'Fedora.' It is safe to wager now that I shall be accused of having plagiarized history."

"EILEEN OGE," an Irish drama by the late Edmund Falconer, which was first acted in America in the Grand Opera-house Oct. 2, 1871, with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence in the leading characters, and subsequently revived there by them several times, was again reproduced Oct. 8. The moderate attendance seemed to indicate that there is little demand for Irish drama at the present time, yet those who were present seemed to enjoy the entertainment because the drama is a good one, the mounting excellent and the general acting satisfactory. Mr. and Mrs. Florence were thoroughly at home in their respective roles, and created a deal of merriment. George Becks, a well-known actor, who keeps a jewelry-store on Sixth avenue, emerged from a retirement of some years' duration to play a young gentleman-farmer, which he did very effectively. The haymaking scene, with singing and dancing, was quite realistic, and elicited deserved applause. As the company was largely increased for this production, the cast is appended: Bryan O'Farrell, W. J. Florence; Bridget Maguire, Mrs. W. J. Florence; Patrick O'Donnell, George Becks; John Thomas, Charles Dade; The Rev. Mr. Mahoney, H. A. Weaver; Mr. Maclean, C. H. Thompson; Henry Loftus, Esq., Davenport Bebus; Mr. Moriarty, J. H. Webster; Andy McCann, Mr. Wallace; Tim, Earle Stirling; Macshane, L. N. Glover; Miss Eileen Moriarty, Miss Ethel Greybrooke; Miss Norah O'Donnell, Miss Helen Corlett; Mrs. O'Donnell, Mrs. Charles Peters; Nelly, Miss Freer. At the Wednesday matinee Mr. Florence is to repeat Capt. Cuttle, and Annie Pixley is to begin an engagement 22 in "Zara."

A PROFESSIONAL MATINEE is to be given at the Cosmopolitan Theatre Thursday, Oct. 11, by Bartholomew's Equine Paradox. The doors will be opened at two o'clock, and the entertainment will commence half an hour later. No tickets are to be sold to the public. Tickets can be had of the managers of the various theatres and combinations, or of Manager John D. Mishler at the Cosmopolitan. Business the past week was satisfactory. The high degree of instinct displayed by these trained hoses is marvelous.

MARY D. PHILLIPS has commenced a suit for limited divorce from Augustus F. Phillips ("Oofty Gooft").

THERE was a slight scare at Harry Miner's Eighth-avenue Theatre night of Oct. 6. An ornamental capital to one of the columns supporting the first balcony slipped from its place and slid down the column, giving rise to an apprehension that the balcony was falling. Some persons left the theatre, but subsequently returned, when it was found that the strength of the support of the balcony had not been impaired.

N. S. WOOD in "The Boy Detective" began a week's engagement at the National Theatre Oct. 8 before only a fair-sized audience. In the olio there appeared Nellie Collins, song-and-dance artist, jig-dancer, etc.; Frank and Clara Mara, a brace of good Irish sketch-artists; Morton and Knowles, vocalists, who in "The Glycerine Twin Sisters" parodied the serio-comics in amusing fashion; Sam and Hannah Holdsworth, whose duets and cornet solos pleased; and Lester and Williams, whose medleys, parodies and comic songs are of a most taking character. Last Wednesday afternoon and evening a host of volunteers assisted in the entertaining programme offered on the anniversary opening festival, and Manager Heumann's friends liberally responded by filling the theatre. "The Celebrated Case" is underlined for next week.

AT MT. MORRIS THEATRE Oct. 8 Rose Eytinge, supported by a good company, appeared in "A Winter's Tale." Thursday and Friday evenings she will play in "Felicia," and Saturday in "Oliver Twist." 15, Roland Reed begins an engagement in "Cheek."

"POP," as played by Rice's Surprise Party, is the attraction this week at the People's Theatre, where a moderate attendance of playgoers assembled on Monday night, and by their enthusiasm made up for lack of numbers. John A. Mackey is still the leading element of this fun-provoking piece, and Emma Hanley as Pygmalion in the burlesque sketch of "The Awakening of the Statue" was also a notably attractive feature. "The New Flying Dutchman" will be put on next week.

AT THE STANDARD THEATRE business continues good with "The Merry Duchess" as the attraction. The cast in a few of the minor roles has been changed, W. Gillow now doing Lothbury Jones; W. White, Inspector Green; and W. H. West, Alderman Gog. The opera will be withdrawn after next week to make way for a short season of French opera, opening Oct 22.

ALBERT G. EAVES is the new manager of the Twenty-third-street Theatre, instead of H. J. Eaves.

BEN BAKER, the veteran stage-manager, has been elected assistant-secretary of the Actors' Fund.

THE ONLY CHANGE in the programme at Billy Birch's San Francisco Minstrels this week is "Little Darling, Dream of Me," sung by James E. Adams and a chorus. Frank Dumont's burlesque "X-Seltzer" continues to be a strong feature, and the specialties of the Big Four, the Only Leon, Schoolcraft and Coes and Bob Slavin furnish abundant food for mirth. Business rules good, as it should with such strong attractions.

THE NEW ATTRACTION at the Globe Dime Museum is "Lady Dude, or Dudines," which proved a good drawing card all last week, and is likely to be a popular feature for some time to come. The new appearances in the Theatorium Oct. 8 were Georgie Marsh, Harry Thompson, Eva Marsh, Rooney and Thompson, Ed. Rockwell, Young Ellsworth and Mons. Fecthner. Curiosities and specialty people desiring dates are requested to address the management, as per advertisement.

A NEW MELODRAMA.—Milton Nobles drew well last week at the Grand Opera-house, St. Louis, and on Oct. 5 presented an original melodrama entitled "Love and Law," in three acts. The principal characters are Felix O'Paff, an Irish lawyer, and Ritta, a street-singer. She is supposed to be a daughter of Giovanni Conti, an Italian organ-grinder. The plot develops the fact that Ritta is heir to a large English estate, left to her when she was an infant. Harold Carker, who had been despoiled of the estate by his father in favor of his sister's child, conspired with the Italian to remove Ritta, as the estate must then revert to him. About this time Carker is sent to Australia for a criminal offense, and the Italian comes to America, bringing the child with him. He raises her as his own daughter, and takes her out with him to sing on the streets. His hidden design is to use her in future as a witness against Carker if he refuses to give him money. O'Paff, who is a New York lawyer, hears Ritta sing on the street, becomes interested in her, shrewdly suspects that she is not Conti's daughter, follows them to the cellar where they reside with an old crone, and finds Conti about to beat her. He rescues Ritta and takes her from the cellar. O'Paff sends Ritta to school and takes a fatherly interest in her. Carker in the meantime escapes from Australia and comes to New York, where he renews his acquaintance with Conti, and returns to his old swindling practices. Carker employs the firm of Flint & O'Paff to secure him possession of his father's estate in England, not daring to return there. By this means O'Paff gets communication with the English authorities, and then learns the true history of Ritta, whom Carker supposes dead. By a clever ruse, O'Paff, disguising himself as the Italian, interviews Carker and learns the secret. The drama was well mounted and ran quite smoothly for a first presentation. The following was the cast: Ritta, Dollie Nobles; Sir Granthey Berkley, Edwin L. Mortimer; Harold Carker, Geo. A. Parkhurst; Giovanni Conti, H. D. Byers; Ferdinand Hofmeier, Max Ferhmann; Stephen Flint, Joseph W. Gardner; Nicholas Crane, W. B. Wright; Jimmie Nipper, George W. Barnum; Helen Montague, Alfa Perry; Kitty O'Rourke, Charline Weidman; Signora Rosa, Grace Page; Felix O'Paff, Milton Nobles. THE DUFF STANDARD OPERA COMPANY gave the first presentation in America of Leo Delibes' "Lakme" at the Grand Opera-house, Chicago, Ill., Oct. 4, with this cast: Lakme, Emma Juch; Mallika, Sara Barton; Rose, Marie Hunter; Mrs. Benson, Rosa Cooke; Nilakantha, Signor Campobello; Gerald, Wallace McCreery; Frederick, C. K. L. Black; Naini, Fred Dixon; Lady Ellen, Miss M. Waldemere. The plot was published in THE CLIPPER when the opera was first produced in Paris. Miss Juch made a success of the trying role of Lakme, winning much applause from the large audience present. Next to her in excellence came the performance of Signor Campobello as the Hindoo Priest. Wallace McCreery made an honest attempt to sustain the role of Gerald, but the music was too high and too complicated for his voice. The others do not call for special mention. Mr. Black made an exceedingly amateurish and inefficient Frederick, and suffered much from the guying and sarcastic applause of the audience. The orchestration is elaborate, and the music generally is of a weird, sombre tone that has none of the catching qualities that go so far to recommend musical performances to the general public. The opera was handsomely placed upon the stage, and presented with brilliant effects and beautiful costumes. The choruses were well drilled and did their work well, and the ballet, led by Mlle. Sidonia, was a pleasing feature. The opera was repeated 5, 6, to good-sized audiences.

THE DUFF STANDARD OPERA COMPANY closed a successful engagement at the Grand Opera-house, Chicago, Ill., Oct. 6, opening in Cincinnati, O., 8, due in Dayton 15, Springfield 16, Columbus 17, Louisville, Ky., 18, 19, 20, St. Louis, Mo., 22.

"Girola" is "The Black Mantles" revamped. The company went to Philadelphia for two weeks; thence to Richmond, Va. This week Maude Granger in "Her Second Love." Lytton Sothern 15.

"IOLANTHE" was produced in splendid style at the Arch-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, Oct. 8, to a good-sized audience.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

NEW PIECES.

"In the Ranks,"

a melodrama by George R. Sims and Henry Pettitt, was produced at the Adelphi Theatre, London, Eng., Oct. 6, the opening of the season. A cablegram to The Herald says: "The audience was large and noisy. The gallery hooted vice and wept with virtue. The political hits were much relished. When a comic character exclaimed, 'We poor soldiers on the battle-field get a wooden leg, and the fellows who look on with opera-glasses get a pension and a title!' the mob gave three groans for Lord Wolseley. The allusion to Queen Victoria's maternal affections was received with sullen silence. The scenery was wonderfully contrived. All the tricks of revolving machinery were called into play. Prisons were instantly transformed into barracks, squalid garrets into gayly lighted streets, farmhouses into leafy glades. The supernumeraries were perfectly drilled. The village gossips really gossiped. The troops performed exact evolutions, and an infinity of natural touches were added by the stage-manager and scene-painter. Roses twined in rustic windows, canaries chirped in their cages, and the play was charged with an atmosphere of country life. The plot is a subordinate matter. It is based on the Tennysonian lines—

A lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight.

To illustrate this truism, Colonel Wynter, an irascible old gentleman from India, is met in the woods by Richard Benton, a convict returning from Australia. The convict finds a gun hidden in the brushwood, and aims it at the Colonel. The gun fails to go off; nevertheless the Colonel falls grievously wounded. The convict flees, and suspicion falls on Ned Drayton, an estimable young man, who is about to marry Ruth Herrick, a farmer's daughter. Believing the convict to be his father, Drayton allows himself to be arrested. On a plea that the gun failed to go off he escapes with three months' imprisonment. His career is blighted. He enlists as a private soldier, deserts, and, coming home, finds the convict drugging his wife with morphine. Overwhelmed by this baseness, he confesses the truth, is restored to the bosom of his family and is promoted to distinction in the service which he has done so much to adorn. Charles Warner, who plays the hero, is accepted as the ideal of manly strength and comeliness. Mr. Herbert, late of Wallack's, has a small part. There is much in the play to make the judicious grieve, but the gallery liked it and called the authors before the curtain. If the public is not tired of English melodrama the play may thrive fairly well in America."

"Le Vertigo,"

a new opera-bouffe by M. Herve, was produced at the opening of the Renaissance Theatre, Paris, France, Oct. 1. It was a complete failure. An opera-comique in one act, the music by M. Sellenick and the text by Erckmann-Chartrain, entitled was produced the same night and made a success. The plot, which is very slight, shows the rivalry of a vine-dresser and a brewer, the one maintaining the superiority of wine, the other that of beer. The children of these two fierce enemies are lovers, but cannot marry, owing to the paternal rancor. A merry scene of intoxication, which shows the final superiority of French vines over German hops, results in a reconciliation, followed by marriage, and brings this semi-patriotic idyl to an end. Its details are particularly well worked up, and Mr. Sellenick has composed for it a careful but rather overdeveloped score.

"La Vie,"

an English adaptation by H. B. Varnie of Offenbach's "La Vie Parisienne," was produced in the Theatre Royal, Brighton, Eng., Sept. 17, and made a hit. It was to have been produced at the Avenue Theatre, London, Oct. 3.

"Fate's Decree,"

an adaptation of "Paul Clifford" by H. W. Williamson, was produced at Astley's, London, Sept. 17, and bids fair to have a successful run.

THE LONDON THEATRES

are reported as doing a business more than equal to the average at this period of the year.

"INGOMAR" at the Lyceum, with Mary Anderson as Parthenia, "is increasing in attraction." Her next character will be Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons."

FRAU ELLMENREICH made her London debut in the Gaiety Theatre (matinee) Oct. 3 in "Mary Stuart," speaking English. A cablegram says: "The performance was powerful and the lady's reception was favorable, but the play is out of date."

MINNIE PALMER made her London debut Sept. 17 at the Grand Theatre, and The Era confirms the report of her success which was cabled hither. It also states that her "financial success is so far in excess of all expectations that arrangements are being made to cancel other dates, and to keep 'My Sweetheart' on the bills up to Christmas."

"IOLANTHE" was sung for the 300th time in the Savoy Theatre Sept. 22.

NEW DRAMAS.—A new drama by Robert Buchanan and Augustus Harris entitled "A Sailor and His Lass, or Love and Treason," is to be produced at Drury-lane Oct. 9, and Burnand's burlesque of "The Tempest," under the name of "Ariel," at the Gaiety 8.....A new piece upon which Wills and Hermann are at work for the Princess' Theatre, to follow "The Silver King," is in three acts. In the prologue the action is placed at Byzantium about the year 365.

PICKINGS.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN, it is said, has undertaken to write an Italian opera, which, if finished in time, is to be produced at Covent-garden next year. The story of Mary Stuart is to form the subject of the libretto.

"MY PARTNER" was successfully produced in the Residenz Theatre, Berlin, Sept. 15.

"OLYMPE DE CLERES," a new drama by Alexandre Dumas, is to be shortly produced at the Gaiete, Paris.

J. H. SURRIDGE has succeeded Mr. Kemble as interlocutor of Moore & Burgess' Minstrels, London. The opening of the nineteenth year of the troupe was celebrated Sept. 18, when "Pony" Moore made an address, during which he stated "on Sept. 18, 1865, the entertainment began, and since then 5,616 night performances and 3,137 matinees had been given."

SIR MICHAEL COSTA is to pass the Winter in Italy.

A COMPARATIVE FAILURE.—Bernhardt appeared in "Frou-Frou" for the first time in Paris Sept. 17 at the Porte St. Martin. Her reception was somewhat frigid. Her Frou-Frou, far from pleasing the critics, elicited from them a chorus of politely-worded condemnation that doubtless galled the actress as much as it must have taken her by surprise. The house was crowded and fashionable for such an early period of the season; it manifested at frequent intervals no little warmth in its approval of Mme. Bernhardt's efforts, and this show of favor, together with the enthusiasm of the actress' thick-and-thin worshipers, might have led one to suppose that the Porte St. Martin had set out on its new career under triumphant auspices. This was certainly the impression prevailing behind the curtain during the evening, and in front, especially towards the close, when the emotion became general. Every outward indication of a success may be said to have been apparent. But next morning all this pleasant delusion was dispelled by strictures so severe and general that there was no need to read between the lines to discover what a hostile verdict Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's Frou-Frou had drawn forth. All the critics condemned her, one styling the performance "a Frou-Frou Fedora;" another said "it was a frisky matron we had before us, not a frivolous, light-hearted girl;" another "that she is not young enough for the role, and the 'effort' to be gay and thoughtless becomes too transparent."

MLLE. NEVADA is studying the role of Lakme to supply the place of Mlle. Van Zandt, who has not yet put in an appearance at the Salle Favart, Paris, although the opera has been several times announced and withdrawn.

THE THREE WILSON BROTHERS are performing in the London music-halls.

WILLIE EDOUIN'S "BUNCH OF KEYS" Co. began a provincial tour in Edinburgh Sept. 17.

FIRE WITH LOSS OF LIFE.—A cable-dispatch from Gevi Samika, Japan, says that while a performance was going on in a theatre at that place Oct. 5 a fire broke out and spread with such rapidity that seventy-five persons lost their lives in the flames and one hundred others were injured more or less seriously by being knocked down and trampled upon in the panic that ensued. A number of persons escaped by jumping from the windows.

SHAKESPEARE'S GRAVE is not to be disturbed, the Mayor of Stratford-on-Avon having refused his consent. The Council Oct. 2 passed a resolution condemning any disturbance of his grave.

CHESS.

To Correspondents.

CHAS. D. STANFORD, Boston.—It is very unusual to see such a problem as this resulting from a "first attempt;" and if you can assure us that it is entirely original with you we will publish it with uncommon pleasure.

J. C. BIRD, St. Louis.—Yes, you are fairly launched on the ocean of criticism and must take your chances. Keep it up. Thanks for promise to keep us posted.

CHAS. L. PAGE.—Thanks for renewed favors, which we utilize.

"ELACK."—"C. L. P." desires us to say that about thirty seconds on your problem revealed this: 1..Q to her R 2 +; 2..Q to Kt 2 +; 3..R x B +; 4..Q to Kt 7, mate. Give 'em something not so obvious.

TORSCH BROS., 131 W. Baltimore street, Baltimore, Md.—Please inform us if copies of Mr. Sellman's "Games of Vienna Tourney" are still to be had.

WM. GROW, Lead City.—If the above does not bring a reply we will return your money. The London Tourney is to be published in full. When it comes we shall notice it.

"HANS."—Read the following from "C. L. P."—and smile: "I am happy to say that I solved Problem 1,396, as follows: 1..Kt to B 7 +; 2..Q to Kt 5 +; 3..Q to her 2 +; 4..K to R 4 dis +; 5..Kt to Q 6 +; 6..Q to Kt 4 +. The line of play by which the mating position is reached is very pleasing. Of course the series of checks is forced, as is manifest from the great freedom of the Black Q; but the idea is cleverly rendered, and the mating position, considering the comparative shortness of the problem, is quite obscure."

The People's Choice.

BARLOW, WILSON & COMPANY'S MAMMOTH MINSTRELS.

A Grand Success in New Orleans

THE CRESCENT CITY DELIGHTED.
THE ADADEMY OF MUSIC PACKED AND HUNDREDS TURNED AWAY.

Unsolicited Press Endorsement:

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—As good wine needs no bush, so the good minstrel company requires no taffy. The Barlow, Wilson & Company Minstrels appeared at the Academy last night, and to an audience that fully tested the capacity of the house. Before the curtain went up every seat had been sold, and hundreds were disappointed in not getting good standing-room. It is a rattling, good, all-around show these minstrels give. Billy Carter, a New Orleans boy, now with this show, found a house full of old friends. Mr. Frank Moran is a genius, and will make himself a favorite here.—PICAYUNE, Oct. 1.

Neither hot weather nor dudes can keep people away from minstrel entertainments. Yesterday the city was overwhelmed with a hot wave, so terrible that the Signal Service had billed it as a freezing blizzard, and ordered danger signals up, and yet when the matinee performance commenced at the Academy of Music it was full, and all through the entertainment the crowded people prespired and enjoyed it. The Barlow & Wilson company give a good show, take it all through, and is doing a fine business.—PICAYUNE, Oct. 4.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Barlow, Wilson & Co.'s Minstrel Company opened their engagement at the Academy last night, and were greeted by one of the largest houses ever seen within that theatre. The auditorium was packed from pit to dome, every available corner being taken advantage of, and the aisles lined with standing spectators pressed together in a solid mass. At 8 o'clock every seat in the house had been sold, and applicants for admission were turned away before the curtain was rung up. The audience was kept in constant laughter, and testified to its appreciation by loud and repeated applause. The same programme will be repeated to-night.—TIMES-DEMOCRAT, Oct. 1.

BARLOW & WILSON'S MINSTRELS.—The popularity of minstrelsy—and of Barlow & Wilson in particular—was fully illustrated last night at the Academy of Music. The house was full to overflowing, the people were packed in like sardines, and fully five hundred were turned away from lack of even standing-room. The mass of humanity inside enjoyed the performance to the utmost, and went wild over New Orleans' favorite, George Wilson. The company is what is known in the profession as an "all star," and from the ballad-singers, through the list of dancers and comedians, all are of the best. Frank Moran, Billy Carter, Barlow and Wilson—all were uproariously received, and the fun was limited only by the end of the programme. Wilson's "dude song" is the best seen here, and with Barlow and Moran he made the audience shriek with merriment. The "Four Aces"—Talbot, Shannon, Crawford and McKisson—are immense in their acrobatics; but, to cut a long story short, the whole party is the best seen here in the minstrel line, and their audiences through the week will be measured simply by the capacity of the house. To see George Wilson, alone, is worth double the admission, and, as a Boston newspaper says, "he is in minstrelsy what Booth is in legitimate."—CHRONICLE, Oct. 1.

CARD. THE TRUTH.

A certain minstrel company sent their servant to Washington to declare war against BARLOW, WILSON & COMPANY'S MAMMOTH MINSTRELS. Result: Barlow, Wilson & Company did the largest business ever done in Washington. The opposition, smarting under their defeat, published their own views of Barlow, Wilson & Company in THE CLIPPER on Sept. 22, but in their excitement they credited THE WASHINGTON CRITIC with the same. THEY FORGOT TO STATE THAT THEY PAID THE CRITIC THE USUAL ADVERTISING RATES FOR THEIR CARD. They also neglected to say that they were attempting to deceive the public.

THE FOLLOWING LETTER EXPLAINS ITSELF:

OFFICE OF THE EVENING CRITIC, WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 28, 1883.

H. J. CLAPHAM, Manager Barlow & Wilson.—DEAR SIR: Yours received. It is only fair to say that the extract from THE CRITIC you inclose was paid for at regular advertising rates. The matter you complain of was simply a business transaction. Yours, etc., M. D. HELME, Business-manager.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

HAVERLY'S NEW MINSTRELS, under the management of Kit Clarke, are reported as doing a most prosperous business in Texas, not yet having found a single hall large enough to accommodate their patrons. This company was booked to appear at Vera Cruz Oct. 29, and thence through Mexico; but the prevalance of yellow-fever there has compelled a change in route, and a trip into the distant Southwest is planned. At Galveston Oct 1 an entirely new mammoth song-and-dance was first presented, in which eighteen performers appear, and it made a great hit. It was written for this company by Edward Solomon, composer of "Billee Taylor," and is called "Sweet Apple-blossoms." Wm. Smith, Ed. Murphy, J. Mullen, Ed. Shields and Geo. Turner, song-and-dance men, joined Sept. 26. The Galveston News of Oct. 1 refers to an incident of their tour as follows:

At half-past seven o'clock yesterday evening, and for an hour afterwards, there was a packed crowd at Tremont Opera-house awaiting the Haverly Minstrels' performance, while hundreds were upon the streets unable to gain admission. It was known that the train was delayed, but a telegram from the manager of the company that they would reach the city at 8.25 served to keep the people in the house. A second telegram announced that the train would not arrive until 9.45. It read: "Will reach you at ten. Boys in baggage-car blacking up. Baggageman shedding tears of laughter at one of Sadler's new jokes." Mr. Greenwall then stated that the curtain would arise at ten o'clock. A portion of the audience tired of waiting left, but still by the time the entertainment opened there was a large crowd in attendance. The train reached the depot at 10.32, and at 10.45 the curtain was rolled up. The members of the company, who had been up all the previous night, and had been on the cars twenty hours were naturally well worn, but nevertheless they gave the entire programme, and, considering all the difficulties, rendered it in admirable style. The men blacked up on the train, and in fact prepared for the stage with a genuine rush. In the first part the songs and jokes were new and very good. The latter features were new and the show throughout was creditable and pleasant. The company will appear this evening, and again exemplify the caption on one of the bills "Haverly never disappoints."

HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL COURT MINSTRELS, including forty performers, will open the season at Toronto, Ont., Oct. 22. The new troupe is announced as having handsome costumes and pictorial printing and as being fitted out generally in first-class style. The band will be dressed in full court costume, and will give a street parade in each city. Endmen, comedians, specialty artists, musicians, etc., are wanted. This company will perform in the large cities only, and dates can be arranged through C. H. King, secretary, as per card. Billy Sweatnam is asked to telegraph at once.

HAVERLY'S MASTODONS gave the most satisfactory performances of the season to large business at the Masonic Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 5, 6. Route from there: Memphis 8, 9, Huntsville 10, Knoxville 11, Chattanooga 12, Atlanta 13, Montgomery 15, Savannah, Ga., 16, 17, Mobile, Ala., 18, 19, Pensacola, Fla., 20, New Orleans 21, one week.

ROBINSON & MCALLISTER'S MINSTRELS showed in Attleboro, Mass., Oct. 8, Woonsocket, R. I., 9; thence to Southbridge 10, Webster 11, Westboro 12, Marlboro 13.

A BARITONE-SINGER and interlocutor is wanted for Leavitt's Gigantean Minstrels. Address Manager A. A. Spitz as per card.

CARNCROSS' MINSTRELS, Philadelphia, were patronized to the utmost capacity of the Eleventh-street Opera-house Oct. 8. The burlesques of "Levy at Belmont" and "The Wild West" continue to hold a corner in fun. Hamlin and Keeler have joined the company and made a hit in their plantation-scene "Extremes." Another novelty is Lewis Dockstader's act of "Ripples" and a laughable extravaganza called "Anatomy." People were turned away all last week.

J. M. JOHNSON, who appears on the end and in the olio with Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels, claims the biggest kind of hit.

BARLOW, WILSON & CO.'S MINSTRELS did a big business in New Orleans, La., last week, although the weather was the hottest of the season there. Newspaper reports endorse the statement telegraphed by our correspondent that people were turned away unable to find good standing-room, and the performance pleased immensely. Manager Clapham canceled his date in Pensacola, Fla., on account of yellow-fever, and the route will be Selma Oct. 11, Montgomery 12, Columbus, Ga., 13, Eufaula, Ala., 15, Macon, Ga., 16, Augusta 17, Athens 18, Savannah 19, 20. Our readers are referred to the company's advertisement on another page. A telegram dated Mobile, Ala., Oct. 8, says: "Intensely hot, but Barlow & Wilson had the largest house ever seen in this city. Many were turned away, and the performance was a grand success."

BAIRD'S MINSTRELS closed a successful engagement at the Windsor Theatre, Boston, Mass., Oct. 6. Their route is Newburyport Mass., 11, Portsmouth, N. H., 12, Farmington 13, Dover 15, Great Falls 16, Biddeford, Me., 17, Brunswick 18, Bath 19, Rockland 20, Camden 22, Belfast 23, Bangor 24. P. C. Shortis of this company was presented last week by Boston friends with a gold watch, chain and charm.

THE "ORIGINAL" GEORGIA MINSTRELS—Richards & Pringle, managers—played in Mexico, Mo., Oct. 3. During the day they visited the grave of their comrade Charles Johnson, who died there last season, and after playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," they placed there a beautiful monument to his memory.

HAVERLY'S MASTODONS crowded the Opera house, Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2, 3, 4. Banks Winter, formerly with Armstrong Bros. Minstrels, joined them there.

THE ARMSTRONG BROS.' MINSTRELS disbanded in Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 2.

SWEATNAM, comedian, now of Emerson's Minstrels, can be engaged as advertised.

I. W. BAIRD'S MAMMOTH MINSTRELS opened at the Windsor Theatre, Boston, Oct. 1. The company has been well appreciated, and its numerous attractions, including four endmen, led by Lew Benedict, Harry Pierson's burlesque prima-donna specialty, Joe Hart's banjo-solos and end business, P. C. Shortis' musical act, an excellent vocal sextet, the Royal Handbell-ringers, Conway, Mack, Kennedy and Clark's songs-and-dances, Prince Pharaoh's contortion performances, Clive and Lovick's cornet duet, and the afterpiece "De Smyth's Reception" make up a programme full of fun and entertaining musical features. The company is now en route under I. W. Baird's management, with Charles E. Cook business-manager. The press of Boston is unanimous in its endorsement of this excellent organization, and the numerous extracts published elsewhere give it the credit of furnishing "a bright, lively and wholesome entertainment."

"BOB HART'S LIFE" and one of his burlesque lectures are published and for sale as advertised.

(FORMERLY OF THE FAMOUS SULLIVAN AND HARRINGTON) have joined forces and are doing an entirely new white-face comedy act entitled "TWO LEGITS FROM UNION-SQUARE," a satirical burletta of fun made prominent by two comedians of rare talent (not nerve). THE FUNNIEST IRISH-COMEDIAN ON EARTH
JOE J. SULLIVAN

AND HIS MATCHLESS SPECIALTY COMPANY score another hit at the American Theatre, New Haven, Oct. 1. A packed house and a delighted audience. The press unanimous in proclaiming this the most laughter-provoking and best money-drawing company to-day on the road.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

One of the largest audiences ever assembled at the American Theatre gave a very hearty reception last evening to the performance presented by Joe J. Sullivan's "Maloney's Raffle" Comedy Co. * * * Joe J. Sullivan presented a rather ludicrous type of the stage Hibernian, and had only to open his mouth to provoke a laugh. The other members of the combination were all first-class in their specialties.—NEW HAVEN REGISTER, Oct. 2.

The eccentric Irish comedian Joseph J. Sullivan is all that was predicted of him. He produced more original, genuine Irish fun and humor than is often boiled down in one show. His face is the whole map of Ireland and his actions that of the genuine thoroughbred. The large audience, among whom were a large number of ladies, were unanimous in praise of the entire entertainment.—COURIER AND JOURNAL, Oct. 2.

The extravaganza of Dan Maloney's Raffle, which closes the bill, is one continual roar of laughter from the time the curtain rises until it falls. Mr. Sullivan in his impersonation of Patsy Lacy has created a line of character-acting which is entirely his own.—MORNING NEWS, Oct. 2.

From beginning to end the show is one continuous round of mirth-provoking situations, and all who want the luxury of a hearty laugh should take a ticket for the Raffle.—COURIER AND JOURNAL, Oct. 4.

I. W. BAIRD'S
MAMMOTH MINSTRELS
THE IDEALS OF BURNT-CORK COMEDY.
FOURTH ANNUAL ENGAGEMENT AND OPENING OF THE
WINDSOR THEATRE, BOSTON.
THE BOSTON PRESS:

MINSTRELSY AT THE WINDSOR.—The Windsor Theatre was opened for the first time this season last evening, and a full house welcomed Baird's Minstrels, who began their fourth annual engagement. The first-part, more than an hour in length, introduced a good vocal sextet—some old favorites, Theo. Jackson, Harry Nelson, J. J. Kelly and J. H. Tower appearing—and eight endmen, with an excellent orchestra. Lew Benedict and Joe Hart won the comedy honors on the extreme ends. A lively operatic finale introduced the noted burlesque prima-donna Harry Pierson, and he contributed the chief features of the drollery which concluded the bill. The star of the olio was Lew Benedict, whose stump-speech kept the audience in continual merriment. Always one of the funniest of the funny! Lew, like good wine, improves with age. Joe Hart's banjo-solos met with enthusiastic approval. Prince Pharaoh's contortions were simply wonderful. Messrs. Clive and Lovick, cornettists, performed a pleasing duet. Mr. P. C. Shortis, one of the most amusing and gifted of musical artists, scored a success. The sweet singing of the Royal Handbell Ringers to their own accompaniment was an agreeable interlude in the succession of variety features. Conway, Mack, Kennedy and Clark contributed a hilarious song-and-dance and some intricate and well-executed clog-stepping upon marble-pedestals. Taken as a whole, Manager Baird has brought an entertainment refined, original and brilliant throughout, which suffers nothing by comparison with others.—THE DAILY HERALD, Oct. 2, 1883.

WINDSOR THEATRE.—This establishment was opened last night for the season, with Baird's favorite Minstrel Troupe as the attraction. This company is so well known and so thoroughly appreciated in the city that it is not to be wondered at that a thronged audience was in attendance to receive them, and the applause which their performances elicited throughout the evening attested to their excellence as an organization. There are four endmen in the first-part, led on by Lewis Benedict, and, as can well be imagined, the fun is fast and furious. The first-part is made up of songs, ballads and comicalities, all capitally done. Hart's banjo-solos and comic songs created much amusement, and a species of burlesque on a grand-opera, with Mr. Harry Pierson as the prima-donna, was not only ludicrous in the extreme, but was given with good musical effect. The performances conclude with an afterpiece entitled "The De Smyth's Reception," but between whiles there is a plenty of variety to keep up the interest. Performances are to be given every evening throughout the week and on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.—THE DAILY TRAVELLER, Oct. 2, 1883.

MINSTELSY AT THE WINDSOR.—The Windsor Theatre was opened last evening, when Baird's Minstrels appeared before a large audience. The programme consisted of songs and ballads during the first-part, four endmen doing the funny business. Then followed a travesty on the classic opera, Harry Pierson taking the prima-donna role tunefully and with considerable spirit. There was the conventional stump-speech by Lew Benedict, and Joe Hart picked pleasantly on the old banjo. The other attractions were a very remarkable contortionist, a quartet of song-and-dance men, cornet-duets, bell-ringing, clog-dancing, and imitation of musical instruments on the violin. The performance concluded with a laughable afterpiece entitled "The De Smyth's Reception."—THE DAILY TRANSCRIPT, Oct. 2, 1883.

WINDSOR THEATRE.—A crowded house welcomed Baird's Minstrels at the Windsor last evening, and a capital entertainment met with ample appreciation. Lew Benedict and Joe Hart win the comedy honors. The former's stump-speech and the latter's banjo-songs are first-class features in their way. P. C. Shortis' musical entertainment and Prince Pharaoh's wonderful contortions are strong cards in the olio, which also includes clog and song-and-dance and the Royal Handbell Ringers. The singing is good, and the orchestra very good. Harry Pierson is prima-donna of the party, and contributes largely to the success of the afterpiece, a bright bit of burlesque.—THE DAILY JOURNAL, Oct. 2, 1883.

BAIRD'S MINSTRELS OPEN THE WINDSOR.—For a bright, lively, wholesome entertainment of mirth and music commend us to Baird's Minstrels. They more than fill all requirements. Manager I. W. Baird has already won an enviable reputation as a caterer to patrons of minstrelsy, and with the company with which he began his fourth annual engagement at the Windsor Theatre last evening he is certain to add greatly and deservedly to his financial and professional record by following the simple rule: "The best, and enough of it." Lew Benedict and Joe Hart are strong comedy cards of the troupe. The former needs no introduction. Endman, comedian, and best of all as burlesque orator, he has made the country laugh more years than his agile movements would seem to indicate, and his power to please but grows greater with himself. Mr. Hart is a Bostonian, and a solid favorite at home, where his African harp and eccentric songs always earn encores to the verge of enthusiasm. P. C. Shortis does a brilliant musical-act, and is "a whole show" in himself. The singing of the Royal Handbell Ringers hardly needs the addition of bell-music—it is very fine—and, indeed, the vocal department is one of the strong features, aided as it is by an orchestra of more than ordinary excellence. The first-part lasts over an hour, and ends with one of the prettiest finales we have seen, an operatic dance-medley. In this and the afterpiece, Harry Pierson, one of the best of burlesque prima-donnas, makes a telling hit. Messrs. Cline and Lovick do a good cornet-duet. If Prince Pharaoh's principles are as flexible as his spine he would make a good campaign orator. The facility with which he ties all kinds of knots with himself is only equaled by the rapidity with which he puts himself in shape again. Conway, Mack, Kennedy and Clark do a rollicking song-and-dance, and some artistic clog-dancing upon marble pedestals. So much for detail. To sum up, it is a performance of a very high order, of even excellence, keeping the audience in good humor for three hours, and meriting a nightly repetition of the crowded house of last evening during its week's sojourn at the Windsor.—THE DAILY GLOBE, Oct. 2, 1883.

WINDSOR THEATRE.—Baird's Mammoth Minstrels opened the Windsor for the season last night to a crowded house. The entertainment was bright and sparkling, and the laughter was loud and long continued. Lew Benedict was a host in himself, and was ably seconded by Joe Hart in his mirth-provoking proclivities. The Royal Bellringers made sweet music, and the Four Invincibles—Mack, Conway, Kennedy and Clark—made welkin ring. The vocal sextet sang selections in an admirable manner, and Harry Pierson evoked applause as a burlesque prima-donna. Everything about the entertainment was of a refined character, and the large audience departed in good humor at the close of the performance.—THE DAILY STAR, Oct. 2, 1883.

OPENING OF THE WINDSOR.—The Windsor Theatre was opened for the season last night, Baird's Minstrels being the attraction. A large audience was present, and received these old-time favorites with the most generous applause. The first-part was made up of a very good selection of songs and ballads, pleasingly rendered. Four endmen, led by Lew Benedict, furnished the fun. A travesty on grand Italian opera, introducing Harry Pierson as the prima-donna, was given with much spirit and no little music. Lew Benedict's stump-speech, which has been worn threadbare by constant repetition, was received with as much favor as of old, and Joe Hart's banjo-solos and comic songs were acceptable. The other attractions were a very remarkable contortionist, a quartet of song-and-dance men, cornet-duets, bell-ringing, clog-dancing and imitation of musical instruments on the violin. The performances concluded with a laughable afterpiece entitled "The De Smyth's Reception."—THE DAILY ADVERTISER, Oct. 2, 1883.
